

878.4
L784
3

7231

878.4
L784
3
Livy
Works

7231

REC'D

DATE DUE	BORROWER'S NAME	RECD

LIBRARY
College of St. Francis JOLIET, ILL.

250
bump 6/2

Livy

v.3

3 0301 00034835 5

This book may be kept

FOURTEEN DAYS

A fine will be charged for each day the book is kept overtime.

DE 14 '67

DE 14 '67
GAYLORD 142			PRINTED IN U.S.A.

GAYLORD 142

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

EDITED BY

E. CAPPS, PH.D., LL.D. T. E. PAGE, LITT.D.

W. H. D. ROUSE, LITT.D.

LIVY

III

BOOKS V, VI AND VII

LIVY

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

B. O. FOSTER, PH.D.

OF STANFORD UNIVERSITY

IN THIRTEEN VOLUMES

III

BOOKS V, VI AND VII

LONDON : WILLIAM HEINEMANN
NEW YORK : G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

MCMXXIV

Printed in Great Britain

LONDON: WILLIAM BARNARD
NEW YORK: W. M. BARNARD

TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

THE Latin text of Vols. II. to IV. (comprising Books III.–X.) has been set up, like that of Vol. I., from the latest revisions of the Weissenborn-Mueller edition with German notes, except that the Periochae have been reprinted from the text of Rossbach (1910). But the spelling is that adopted by Professors Conway and Walters in their critical edition of Books I.–V. and Books VI.–X. (Oxford, 1914 and 1919), which is the source also of most of the rather numerous readings which differ from those of the Weissenborn-Mueller text, and has furnished besides the materials from which the textual notes have been drawn up. I have aimed to record every instance where the reading printed does not rest on the authority of one or more of the good MSS., and to indicate the provenience of the emendation. In addition to the symbols used by the Oxford editors, I have employed Ω to designate such of the good MSS. as are not cited specifically for some other reading, and ς to designate one or more of the late MSS. or early printed texts.

Besides the translations mentioned in the preface to Vol. I. (those of Philemon Holland, George Baker, and Canon Roberts) I have had by me the anonymous version printed in London in 1686, in folio, "for Awnsham Churchill at the Black Swan in Ave-Mary Lane, near Paternoster Row."

PREFACE

I am also indebted to the following editions of parts of Livy: Book III. by P. Thoresby Jones, Oxford, 1914; IV. by H. M. Stephenson, Cambridge, 1890; V. by Leonard Whibley, Cambridge, 1910; V.-VII. by Cluer and Matheson, Oxford, 1904; VI. by F. H. Marshall, Cambridge, 1908; IX. by W. B. Anderson, Cambridge, 1909, and by T. Nicklin, Oxford, 1910. The commentaries of Weissenborn-Mueller and Luterbacher have, of course, been constantly consulted.

The maps illustrating the campaign of the Allia have been adapted from Kromayer and Veith, Schlachten-Atlas zur antiken Kriegsgeschichte, published by Wagner and Debes, Leipzig.

B. O. F.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE	v
MANUSCRIPTS	ix
ABBREVIATIONS	x
BOOK V	1
SUMMARY OF BOOK V	188
BOOK VI	193
SUMMARY OF BOOK VI	352
BOOK VII	355
SUMMARY OF BOOK VII	514
INDEX OF NAMES	519
MAP OF CENTRAL ITALY	At end
MAP OF THE GALLIC INVASION	"
MAP OF THE BATTLE OF THE ALLIA	"

THE MANUSCRIPTS

V = Veronensis, 4th century.

F = Floriacensis, 9th century.

P = Parisiensis, 10th century.

E = Einsiedlensis, 10th century.

H = Harleianus prior, 10th century.

T = Thuaneus, 10th century.

t = the 1st and 2nd leaves of T, by another scribe.

B = Bambergensis, 10th or 11th century.

M = Mediceus, 10th or 11th century.

Vorm. = Vormatiensis (as reported by Rhenanus).

R = Romanus, 11th century.

U = Upsaliensis, 11th century.

D = Dominicanus, 11th or 12th century.

L = Leidensis, 12th century.

A = Aginnensis, 13th century.

a = later part of A, 14th century.

Frag. Haverk = Fragmentum Havercampianum (cf. Conway and Walters, vol. i., Praef, p. ix¹).

*M*¹, *M*², etc., denote corrections made by the original scribe or a later corrector. When it is impossible to identify the corrector M^c is employed.

Ω = such of the above MSS. as contain the passage in question and are not otherwise reported.

ς = one or more of the late MSS. or early printed texts.

ABBREVIATIONS

Ald. (or ed. Ald.) = the Aldine edition, Venice, 1518

Cassiod. = Cassiodorius.

Class. Quart. = The Classical Quarterly, London, 1907 ff.

C.I.L. = Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, vol. i.²
Berlin, 1893-5.

Diod. = Diodorus Siculus.

Dion. Hal. = Dionysius of Halicarnassus.

LIVY

FROM THE FOUNDING OF THE CITY

BOOK V

T. LIVI

AB URBE CONDITA

LIBER V

A.U.C.
351

I. PACE alibi parta Romani Veique in armis erant tanta ira odioque, ut victis finem adesse appareret. Comitia utriusque populi longe diversa ratione facta
2 sunt. Romani auxere tribunorum militum consulari potestate numerum; octo, quot nunquam antea, creati, M.¹ Aemilius Mamercus iterum L. Valerius Potitus tertium Ap. Claudius Crassus M. Quinctilius Varus L. Iulius Iulus² M. Postumius M. Furius Camil-
3 lus M. Postumius Albinus. Veientes contra taedio annuae ambitionis, quae interdum discordiarum causa erat, regem creavere. Offendit ea res populorum Etruriae animos, non maiore odio regni quam ipsius
4 regis. Gravis iam is antea genti fuerat opibus superbiaque, quia sollemnia ludorum, quos intermitti nefas

¹ M.' Sigonius (cf. IV. lxi. 1): \bar{m} (or m) Ω .

² L. Iulius Iulus ς (C.I.L. i², p. 116): \bar{m} . iulius rullus Ω : \bar{m} . iulius tullus α : m iulius publius L: \bar{m} uilius publius D.

¹ Livy seems to have erred through including the names of the censors, Camillus and Albinus, in his list of tribunes,

LIVY

FROM THE FOUNDING OF THE CITY

BOOK V

I. PEACE was now established elsewhere, but B.C. 403 Romans and Veientes were at war, and their rage and animosity were such that the end was clearly at hand for those that should be vanquished. Each people held an election very different from that of the other. The Romans enlarged the number of their military tribunes with consular authority, and elected eight,¹ a greater number than ever before, to wit, Manius Aemilius Mamercus (for the second time), Lucius Valerius Potitus (for the third), Appius Claudius Crassus, Marcus Quinctilius Varus, Lucius Julius Iulus, Marcus Postumius, Marcus Furius Camillus, Marcus Postumius Albinus. But the Veientes, weary of annual canvassing, which was sometimes the cause of brawls, chose a king. This gave offence to the feelings of the Etruscan peoples, who loathed not more the institution of kings than the King himself. He had for some time been hateful to the nation by reason of his wealth and arrogance, since he had violently broken up a solemn of whom there were at this time but six. See chap. x. § 1 and chap. xiv. § 5 and notes there.

5 est, violenter diremisset, cum ob iram repulsae, quod suffragio duodecim populorum alius sacerdos ei praelatus esset, artifices, quorum magna pars ipsius servi 6 erant, ex medio ludicro repente abduxit. Gens itaque ante omnes alias eo magis dedita religionibus, quod excelleret arte colendi eas, auxilium Veientibus 7 negandum donec sub rege essent decrevit; cuius decreti suppressa fama est Veis propter metum
 regis, qui a quo tale quid dictum referretur, pro seditionis cum principe, non vani sermonis auctore¹ 8 habebat. Romanis etsi quietae res ex Etruria nuntiabantur, tamen quia omnibus conciliis eam rem 9 agitari adferebatur, ita muniebant ut ancipitia muni-menta essent: alia in urbem et contra oppidanorum eruptiones versa, aliis frons in Etruriam spectans, auxiliis si qua forte inde venirent obstruebatur.

II. Cum spes maior imperatoribus Romanis in obsidione quam in oppugnatione esset, hibernacula
 etiam, res nova militi Romano, aedificari coepta, consiliumque erat hiemando continuare bellum.
 2 Quod postquam tribunis plebis, iam diu nullam novandi res causam invenientibus, Romam est alla-tum, in contionem prosiliunt, sollicitant plebis 3 animos, hoc illud esse dictitantes quod aera militibus sint constituta; nec se fefellisse id donum inimi-
 4 corum veneno inlitum fore. Venisse libertatem

¹ auctore *MFUBP*⁴: auctorem Ver... *M*² (or *M*¹) POEHDLa.

festival, which it is impious to interrupt, in his re- 8.6.403 sentiment of a political rebuff; and because the suffrages of the Twelve Peoples had returned another man as priest in preference to him, he had suddenly carried off the actors, most of whom were his own slaves, in the middle of the games. And so the nation which was devoted beyond all others to religious rites (and all the more because it excelled in the art of observing them) voted to refuse its help to the men of Veii, so long as they should obey a king. This vote the Vcientes would not suffer to be mentioned, in their fear of the King, who had a way of treating the man by whom any such saying was reported as a leader in sedition, not as the bearer of an idle tale. Although the Romans got word that things were quiet in Etruria, still, because they heard that this question came up at all their meetings,
 they so constructed their works as to have a double fortification, one facing Veii, to oppose the sallies of the town-folk, the other confronting Etruria, to shut off any assistance that might come from thence.

II. As the Roman generals hoped more from a siege than from an assault, they even began the erection of winter quarters—a new thing to the Roman soldier—and planned to carry the campaign on, straight through the winter. When news of this came to Rome, to the plebeian tribunes, who had now for a long time been unable to hit upon any pretext for agitation, they hurried before the assembly and set to work upon the passions of the commons: So this was the reason that the soldiers had been granted pay! They had not been mistaken in thinking that this gift of their opponents would be smeared with poison. The liberty of the

A.U.C.
351

plebis; remotam in perpetuum et ablegatum ab urbe
 et ab re publica iuventutem iam ne hiemi quidem aut tempori anni cedere ac domos ac res invisere 5 suas. Quam putarent continuatae militiae causam esse? Nullam profecto aliam inventuros quam ne quid per frequentiam iuvenum eorum in quibus vires omnes plebis essent agi de commodis eorum posset.
 6 Vexari praeterea et subigi multo acrius quam
 Veientes; quippe illos hiemem sub tectis suis agere, 7 egregiis muris situque naturali urbem tutantes, militem Romanum in opere ac labore nivibus pruinisque obrutum sub pellibus durare ne hiemis quidem spatio, quae omnium bellorum terra marique sit quies, arma 8 deponentem. Hoc neque reges neque ante tribuni-ciam potestatem creatam, superbos illos consules neque triseditionis imperium neque importunos decemviros iniunxisse servitutis, ut perennem militiam 9 facerent.¹ Quidnam illi consules dictatoresve facturi essent, qui consularem² imaginem tam saevam ac trucem fecerint? Sed id accidere haud immerito.
 Non fuisse ne in octo quidem tribunis militum locum
 10 ulli plebeio. Antea trina loca cum contentione summa patricios explere solitos: nunc iam octoiuges
 ad imperia obtinenda ire, et ne in turba quidem 11 haerere plebeium quemquam qui, si nihil aliud,

¹ After facerent the MSS. have: quod tribuni militum in plebe Romana regnum exercerent. Conway and Walters bracket these words; cf. Class. Quart. V. (1911) p. 10.

² consularem Conway and Walters in their note: pro-consularem Ω.

BOOK V. II. 4-11

commons had been sold; the young men, having B.C. 403
 been permanently removed and banished from the City and from the state, were no longer free, even in winter and the stormy season, to see to their homes and their affairs. What, they asked, did their hearers suppose to be the reason for making the service continuous? They would assuredly find no other motive than this: lest, through the presence in large numbers of the young men in whom lay all the vigour of the commons, something might be accomplished for the people's good. Moreover, they were far more ruthlessly abused and trodden down than were the Veientes, who, for their part, spent the winter in their houses, safeguarding their city by means of strong walls and natural defences, whilst the Roman soldiers were enduring toil and danger, overwhelmed with snows and frosts, in tents, not even laying aside their weapons in the winter time, a season of respite from all wars both by land and by sea. Such slavery as this neither kings, nor the proud consuls who came before the establishment of the tribunician power, nor the stern authority of a dictator, nor harsh decenvirs, had laid upon them, — that they should wage perennial war. Pray what would those men do if they should become consuls or dictators, who had made the semblance of consular authority so savage and truculent? But the commons were only getting their deserts. There had been no room even amongst eight military tribunes for a single plebeian. Heretofore the patricians had been wont with the utmost exertion to fill three places in a year: now they were advancing eight abreast to make good their authority, and there was never a commoner hanging on to the crowd, were it admoneat collegas liberos et cives eorum, non servos, militare, quos hieme saltem in domos ac tecta re-12 duci oporteat et aliquo tempore anni parentes liberosque ac coniuges invisere et usurpare libertatem et creare magistratus.

13 Haec taliaque vociferantes adversarium haud imparem nacti sunt Ap. Claudium, relictum a collegis ad tribunicias seditiones comprimendas, virum imbutum iam ab iuventa certaminibus plebeiis, quem 14 auctorem aliquot annis ante fuisse memoratum est per collegarum intercessionem tribuniciae potestatis dissolvendae.

III. Is tum iam non promptus ingenio tantum sed usu etiam exercitatus, talem orationem habuit:
 2 "Si unquam dubitatum est, Quirites,¹ utrum tribuni plebis vestra an sua causa seditionum semper auctores fuerint, id ego hoc anno desisse dubitari certum
 3 habeo; et cum laetor tandem longi erroris vobis finem factum esse, tum, quod secundis potissimum vestris rebus hic error est sublatus, et vobis et propter
 4 vos rei publicae gratulor. An est quisquam qui dubitet nullis iniuriis vestris, si quae forte aliquando fuerunt, unquam aequae quam munere patrum in plebem, cum aera militantibus constituta sunt, tribunos
 5 plebis offensos ac concitados esse? Quid illos

¹ Quirites *D*⁴*a*: qui^r *OE*¹*D*? : qui H : qui in PD? : quin *P*²*F*? UBE: quis L: qui V: omitted by M.

¹ See Book IV, chap. xlviii. The Appius Claudius here mentioned was a grandson of the decemvir.

only to remind his colleagues that their soldiers were B.C. 403 not slaves but freemen and fellow citizens; whom, at least in winter, they were bound to bring back to the shelter of their houses, and to leave them some portion of the year to look after their parents, their children, and their wives, and to use their liberty and elect magistrates.

As they shouted forth these and suchlike arguments, they found an opponent not unequal to them in Appius Claudius, whom his colleagues had left behind to repress sedition on the part of the tribunes. He was a man experienced from his youth up in contentions with the plebs, and I have related how, some years before, he had advised that the intervention of their colleagues be used to break the power of the tribunes.¹

III. The man not only had a nimble wit but was already a practised orator, and he delivered on this occasion a speech to the following effect: "If it has ever been a question, Quirites, whether it was for your sake or their own that the tribunes of the commons have always encouraged sedition, I am certain that the doubt has this year been resolved; and not only do I rejoice that you have at length cleared up a long misunderstanding, but I congratulate both you, and on your account the state as well, that it has happened at a time, of all others, when your affairs are prospering. Or is there any one who doubts that no wrongs which you have suffered, if haply such there have sometimes been, have ever so offended and stirred up the plebeian tribunes as has the boon which the Fathers bestowed upon the commons, when they granted pay for military service? What else do you believe they

aliud aut tum timuisse creditis aut hodie turbare velle nisi concordiam ordinum, quam dissolvendae 6 maxime tribuniciae potestatis rentur esse? Sic hercule tamquam artifices improbi opus quaerunt;
 quippe¹ semper aegri aliquid esse in re publica volunt, ut sit ad cuius curationem a vobis adhibean-7 tur. Utrum enim defenditis an impugnatis plebem?
 Utrum militantium adversarii estis an causam agitis?
 Nisi forte hoc dicitis: 'Quidquid patres faciunt displicet, sive illud pro plebe sive contra plebem est,' 8 et quemadmodum servis² suis vetant domini quicquam rei cum alienis hominibus esse pariterque in iis beneficio ac maleficio abstineri aequum censent, sic vos interdicitis patribus commercio plebis, ne nos comitate ac munificentia nostra provocemus plebem nec plebs nobis dicto audiens atque oboediens sit.
 9 Quanto tandem, si quicquam in vobis, non dico civilis, sed humani esset, favere vos magis et quantum in vobis esset indulgere potius comitati patrum atque 10 obsequio plebis oportuit? Quae si perpetua concordia sit, quis non spondere ausit maximum hoc imperium inter finitimos brevi futurum esse?

IV. "Atqui³ ego, quam hoc consilium collegarum meorum, quo⁴ abducere infecta re a Veiis exercitum noluerunt, non utile solum sed etiam necessarium fuerit, postea disseram: nunc de ipsa condicione 2 dicere militantium libet; quam orationem non apud vos solum sed etiam in castris si habeatur, ipso

¹ quippe Büttner: qui et Ω: wanting in V: et Muretus: qui Conway.

² servis Ald.: cum (tum L) servis Ω.

³ Atqui OEH: atque Ω.

⁴ quo Ω: quod VB.

were afraid of then, or are seeking now to shatter, B.C. 403
 but the harmony of the orders, which they regard as very apt to overthrow the tribunician authority?
 Indeed they are like quack-salvers seeking employment, since they desire that there should always be some disease in the body politic, that there may be something which you may call them in to cure.
 Pray, are you tribunes defending the commons, or attacking them? Are you adversaries of the soldiers, or their advocates? Or perhaps this is your plea: ‘Whatever the Fathers do displeases us, be it in behalf of the commons or against them’; and just as masters forbid outsiders to have aught to do with their slaves, and think it right that they should abstain alike from benefiting and from harming them, so you deny the Fathers intercourse with the commons, lest we by our friendliness and liberality encourage them, or they become dutiful and obedient to us. How much more, if you had in you the slightest—I say not patriotism, but—humanity, ought you rather to have favoured, and, so far as in you lay, to have encouraged the kindly spirit of the Fathers and the complaisance of the plebs? And if this harmony should last, who would not make bold to warrant that our empire would soon be the greatest among the neighbouring peoples?

IV. “I shall presently explain, in regard to this plan of my colleagues, who have not been willing to withdraw the army from Veii with its task unaccomplished,—how not merely profitable but even necessary it was. But first I wish to speak about the actual condition of the soldiers; and I think that if I should express my meaning not in your presence only but also in the camp, the army itself

exercitu disceptante aequam arbitror videri posse. In qua si mihi ipsi nihil quod dicerem in mentem venire posset, adversariorum certe orationibus contentus essem. Negabant nuper danda esse aera militibus, quia nunquam data essent. Quonam modo igitur nunc indignari possunt, quibus aliquid novi adiectum commodi sit, eis laborem etiam novum pro portione iniungi? Nusquam nec opera sine emolumento nec emolumentum ferme sine impensa opera est. Labor voluptasque, dissimillima natura, societate quadam inter se naturali sunt iuncta. Molestae antea ferebat miles se suo sumptu operam rei publicae praebere; gaudebat idem partem anni se agrum suum colere, quaerere unde domi militiaeque se ac suos tueri posset: gaudet nunc fructui sibi rem publicam esse et laetus stipendium accipit; aequo igitur animo patiatur se ab domo ac re familiarum, cui gravis impensa non est, paulo diutius abesse. An si ad calculos eum res publica vocet, non merito dicat: ‘annua aera habes, annuam operam ede; an tu aequum censes militia semestri solidum te stipendium accipere?’ Invitus in hac parte orationis, Quirites, moror; sic enim agere debent qui mercenario milite utuntur; nos tamquam cum civibus agere volumus atque tamquam cum patria nobiscum aequum censemur. Aut non suscipi bellum oportuit aut geri pro dignitate populi Romani et perfici quam primum oportet. Perficietur autem si urgemus obsessos, si non ante abscedimus quam spei nostrae would judge it reasonable. Indeed, though I were B.C. 403 unable to think of anything to urge myself, I could be quite content with the speeches of my opponents. They were lately insisting that pay ought not to be given to the men, because it never had been given. How then can they object, if to those who have gained some new advantage be allotted new labour also, in proportion. Nowhere, as a rule, is service given without recompense, nor recompense except for service; toil and pleasure, most unlike in nature, have been linked together in a sort of natural bond. Formerly the soldier was vexed that he must serve the state at his own cost; yet he was happy to be able, for a half of the year, to till his own field and gain the means of keeping himself and his family, whether he were at home or with the army. Now he is happy that the state affords him gain, and is glad to receive his pay. Let him therefore be resigned to remaining away a little longer from his home and his property, on which he is now no heavy charge. Why, if the commonwealth should call him to a reckoning, would it not justly say, 'You have a year's stipend, render a year's service; do you think it right that for a campaign of six months you should receive the pay of twelve?' I dislike to dwell upon this point, Quirites; for it is thus that men who employ mercenaries ought to argue; we would deal as though with fellow citizens, and we think it only right that you deal with us as with your native country. Either we ought not to have undertaken the war, or we ought to conduct it as befits the Roman People, and end it as quickly as possible. And we shall end it, if we press our beleaguered foes, and quit them not till we have fulfilled our

- finem captis Veiis imposuerimus. Si hercules nulla alia causa, ipsa indignitas perseverantiam imponere 11 debuit. Decem quondam annos urbs oppugnata est ob unam mulierem ab universa Graecia, quam procul
 12 ab domo? quot terras, quot maria distans? Nos intra vicesimum lapidem in conspectu prope urbis nostrae annuam oppugnationem perferre piget? Scilicet quia levis causa belli est nec satis quicquam iusti doloris est quod nos ad perseverandum stimulet.
 13 Septiens rebellarunt; in pace nunquam fida fuerunt; agros nostros miliens depopulati sunt; Fidenates deficere a nobis coegerunt; colonos nostros ibi inter-14 fecerunt; auctores fuere contra ius caedis impiae legatorum nostrorum; Etruriam omnem adversus nos concitare voluerunt hodieque id moliuntur; res repetentes legatos nostros haud procul afuit quin violarent.

V. "Cum his molliter et per dilationes bellum geri oportet? Si nos tam iustum odium nihil movet, ne
 2 illa quidem, oro vos, movent? Operibus ingentibus saepta urbs est, quibus intra muros coercetur hostis;
 3 agrum non coluit, et culta evastata sunt bello; si reducinus exercitum, quis est qui dubitet illos non a cupiditate solum ulciscendi, sed etiam necessitate imposita ex alieno praedandi, cum sua amiserint, agrum nostrum invasuros? Non differimus igitur bellum isto consilio, sed intra fines nostros accipimus.

hopes and captured Veii. Truly, if there were no B.C. 403 other reason, the very indignity of the thing should compel us to persist! Did all Greece once, for one woman's sake, war ten years against a city so far from home, with all those lands and seas between?
 And does it irk us, being less than twenty miles away and almost within sight of Rome, to maintain a siege for a single year? Doubtless our reason for fighting is a trivial one, and we have no proper and sufficient grievance to incite us to persevere!
 Seven times have they renewed the war; never have they kept faith in peace; our fields they have pillaged a thousand times; they forced the Fidenates
 to forsake us; our settlers there they put to death;
 it was they who instigated, in violation of the law of nations, the impious murder of our envoys; they sought to raise up all Etruria against us, and they are striving to this end to-day; when our ambassadors sought redress they well-nigh did them bodily injury.

V. "With such enemies ought we to wage a faint-hearted and dilatory war? If so just grounds of resentment have no power to move us, pray have the following considerations none? The city is hemmed in with vast siege-works, which confine the enemy within his walls; he has not cultivated his land, and what was cultivated has been laid waste in the war;
 if we bring our army back, who can doubt that not only a desire for revenge, but also necessity, constraining them to plunder others since they have lost their own possessions, will cause them to invade our territory? So we are not postponing the war, if we act on your advice, but are receiving it within our own borders. And what of that matter which

A.U.C.
351

- 4 Quid? Illud quod proprie ad milites pertinet, quibus boni tribuni plebis tum stipendium¹ extorquere voluerunt, nunc consultum repente volunt, quale est?
- 5 Vallum fossamque, ingentis utrumque² operis, per tantum spatii duxerunt: castella primo pauca, postea exercitu aucto creberrima fecerunt; munitiones non in urbem modo sed in Etruriam etiam spectantes,³ si
- 6 qua inde auxilia veniant, opposuere; quid turres, quid vineas testudinesque et alium⁴ oppugnandarum urbium apparatus loquar? Cum tantum laboris exhaustum sit et ad finem iam operis tandem perventum, relinquendane haec censetis, ut ad aestatem
- 7 labor? Quanto est minus operae⁵ tueri facta et instare ac perseverare defungique cura? Brevis enim profecto res est, si uno tenore peragitur nec ipsi per intermissiones has intervallaque lentio-
- 8 rem nostram facimus. Loquor de operae et⁶ de temporis iactura. Quid? Periculi, quod differendo bello adimus, num⁷ oblivisci nos haec tam crebra Etruriae concilia de mittendis Veios auxiliis patimur?
- 9 Ut nunc res se habet, irati sunt, oderunt, negant missuros; quantum in illis est, capere Veios licet. Quis est qui spondeat eundem, si differtur
- 10 bellum, animum postea fore, cum si laxamentum dederis, maior frequentiorque legatio itura sit, cum

¹ tum stipendium ζ Madvig: cum stipendium Ω : olim stipendium Heidenhain: stipendium V.

² utrumque Drakenborch: utramque rem V F^2 (or F^3) a: utrumque rem Ω .

³ spectantes F^3a : spec.antis V: expectantes Ω : exspectantes D?: exspectantes PE.

⁴ et alium D^2a Rhenanus: et talium Ω (Vorm?): et talem H: wanting in V.

⁵ operae Hell: opéra Ω .

specially concerns the soldiers, whom the worthy B.C. 403
 plebeian tribunes formerly wished to rob of their pay, but are now desirous of protecting? How does it stand with them? The rampart and the trench, each involving prodigious toil, they have carried all that distance; forts they erected only a few at first, but since then, with the growth of the army, they have built very many; they have thrown up earthworks, not only against the city, but also facing Etruria, if any aid should come from that side;
 what need to speak of towers, mantlets, penthouses,
 and the rest of the equipment for storming towns?
 When they have expended all this labour, and the end of their task is at last in sight, do you vote for abandoning these things, that when summer comes they may sweat and toil again to produce them afresh? How much less effort it requires to guard what is already made, and to press on and persevere and put an end to our anxiety! For surely it is a thing soon done, if we carry it through without stopping, and do not ourselves drag out our hopes with these interruptions and delays. I talk of the loss of time and labour; what of the danger that we run by putting off the war? Do the frequent debates in Etruria about the dispatch of succours to Veii allow us to forget it? Just now they are angry and resentful, and declare that they will send none; for all they care, we may capture Veii. But who is to guarantee that if we postpone the campaign they will hereafter feel the same: since if you slacken, a greater and more numerous embassy will set out,

⁶ operae et Ussing: opere et Ω : operis I³: operum D?:
 opera et V.

⁷ num ζ : nunc. Ω .

- id quod nunc offendit Etruscos, rex creatus Veiis, mutari spatio interposito possit vel consensu civitatis, ut eo reconcilient Etruriae animos, vel ipsius voluntate regis, qui obstare regnum suum saluti civium
- 11 nolit? Videte quot res quam inutiles sequantur illam viam consilii, iactura operum tanto labore factorum, vastatio imminens finium nostrorum, Etrus-
- 12 cum bellum pro Veiente concitatum. Haec sunt, tribuni, consilia vestra, non hercule dissimilia ac si quis aegro qui curari se fortiter passus extemplo convalescere possit, cibi gratia praesentis aut potionis longinquum et forsitan insanabilem morbum efficiat.

VI. "Si mediusfidius, ad hoc bellum nihil pertineret, ad disciplinam certe militiae plurimum intererat insuescere militem nostrum non solum parata¹ victoria

2 frui, sed, si etiam res lentior sit, pati taedium et quamvis serae spei exitum expectare et si non sit aestate perfectum bellum, hiemem opperiri nec, sicut aestivas aves, statim autumno tecta ac recessus²

3 circumspicere. Obsecro vos, venandi studium ac voluptas homines per nives ac pruinas in montes silvasque rapit: belli necessitatibus eam patientiam non adhibebimus quam vel lusus³ ac voluptas elicere

4 solet? Adeone effeminata corpora militum nostrorum esse putamus, adeo molles animos, ut hiemem

¹ parata U: parta Ω: parua O.

² recessus V: recessum (recensum B) Ω.

³ vel lusus early edd.: uel usus (lusus D) Ω.

and since what now offends the Etruscans—the B.C. 403 setting up of a king at Veii—may be altered with the lapse of time or by agreement of the citizens, to the end that thereby they may regain the goodwill of Etruria; or with the consent of the King himself, who would not wish his sovereignty to hurt
 the safety of his people? See how many undesirable consequences attend that line of policy: the loss of works constructed with such effort; the imminent devastation of our fields; the Etruscans, instead of the Veientes only, aroused to war with us.
 It is thus, tribunes, that you would manage matters, much as though in dealing with a sick man, who if he would undergo a strict regimen might begin at once to recover, you should protract his illness and perhaps render it incurable, by indulging his immediate desire for meat and drink.

VI. “If it were of no moment to this war, it was yet, I assure you, of the utmost importance for military discipline that our soldiers become accustomed not only to pluck a victory within their grasp, but if a campaign should be even more protracted, to put up with the tedium and await the outcome of their hopes, however long-deferred; and if a war be not finished in a summer, to stay for winter, nor, like birds of passage, cast about at once,
 on the approach of autumn, for shelter and covert.
 Do the eagerness, pray, and delight that men have in hunting carry them through snow and frost into the mountains and the forests; and shall not we use in the stress of war the same resolution which even sport and pleasure are wont to call out? Do we think the bodies of our soldiers so effeminate, their hearts so faint, that they cannot endure to be one

A.U.C.
351

- unam durare in castris, abesse ab domo non possint? Ut tamquam navale bellum tempestatibus captandis et observando tempore anni gerant, non aestus, non 5 frigora pati possint? Erubescant profecto si quis eis haec obiciat, contendantque et animis et corporibus suis virilem patientiam inesse, et se iuxta hieme atque aestate bella gerere posse nec se patrocinium mollitiae inertiaeque mandasse tribunis, et meminisse hanc ipsam potestatem non in umbra nec in tectis maiores suos creasse.
- 6 “Haec virtute militum vestrorum, haec Romano nomine sunt digna, non Veios tantum nec hoc bellum intueri quod instat, sed famam et ad alia¹ bella et ad 7 ceteros populos in posterum quaerere. An mediocre discrimen opinionis secuturum ex hac re putatis, utrum tandem finitimi populum Romanum eum esse putent cuius si qua urbs primum illum brevissimi temporis sustinuerit impetum, nihil deinde timeat, 8 an hic sit terror nominis nostri ut exercitum Romanum non taedium longinquae oppugnationis, non vis hiemis ab urbe circumssessa semel amovere possit, nec finem ullum alium belli quam victoriam noverit nec impetu 9 potius bella quam perseverantia gerat? Quae in omni quidem genere militiae, maxime tamen in obsidendis urbibus necessaria est, quarum plerasque munitionibus ac naturali situ inexpugnabiles fame 10 sitique tempus ipsum vincit atque expugnat,—sicut winter in camp, away from home; that like sailors B.C. 403 they must wage war with an eye on the weather, observing the seasons, incapable of withstanding heat or cold? They would certainly blush if any one should charge them with this, and would maintain that manly endurance was in their souls and bodies, and that they could campaign as well in winter as in summer; that they had given the tribunes no commission to protect softness and idleness; and that they were mindful that their grandsires had not founded the tribunician power in the shade or under roofs.
- ¹ et ad alia early edd. : et alia Ω : ad alia ζ .

“It is due to the valour of your soldiers, it is due to the Roman name, that you should look not merely to Veii and this present war that is upon us, but should seek for the years to come a reputation that will serve you in other wars and amongst all other nations. Do you suppose there will be no great difference in men’s opinion of us, whether our neighbours conclude the Roman People to be such, that if a city withstand the brunt of their first assault for a very brief time, it need thenceforward have no fears; or whether our name inspire such dread, that men believe that once a Roman army has sat down before a town, it will never budge, either from the weariness of a protracted siege or from the rigours of winter, that it knows no other end of war but victory, and relies in its campaigns not more on swiftness than on perseverance? For perseverance, needful in every kind of warfare, is especially so in besieging cities, since fortifications and natural advantages make most of them impregnable, and time itself subdues them, with hunger and thirst, and captures them, as it shall capture Veii, unless

A.U.C.
351

Veios expugnabit, nisi auxilio hostibus tribuni plebis fuerint, et Romae invenerint praesidia Veientes quae nequiquam in Etruria quaerunt.

- 11 "An est quicquam quod Veientibus optatum aequae contingere possit quam ut seditionibus primum urbs Romana, deinde velut ex contagione castra imple-
- 12 antur? At hercule apud hostes tanta modestia est ut non obsidionis taedio, non denique regni quicquam apud eos novatum sit, non negata auxilia ab Etruscis
- 13 inritaverint animos; morietur enim extemplo quicumque erit seditionis auctor, nec cuiquam dicere ea
- 14 licebit, quae apud vos impune dicuntur. Fustuarium meretur qui signa relinquit aut praesidio decedit: auctores signa relinquendi et deserendi castra non
- 15 uni aut alteri militi, sed universis exercitibus palam in contione audiuntur; adeo quidquid tribunus plebi loquitur, etsi prodendae patriae dissolvendaeque rei publicae est, aduestis aequi¹ audire et dulcedine potestatis eius capti quaelibet sub ea scelera latere
- 16 sinitis. Reliquum est ut quae hic vociferantur, eadem in castris et apud milites agant et exercitus corrum-
- 17 pant ducibusque parere non patiantur, quoniam eademum Romae libertas est, non senatum, non magistratus, non leges, non mores maiorum, non instituta patrum, non disciplinam vereri militiae."

VII. Par iam etiam in contionibus erat Appius tribunus plebis, cum subito, unde minime quis crederet, accepta calamitas apud Veios et superiorem Appium

¹ aequi Rhcnanus: qui (omitted by UO: space of not more than four letters in V): ei *E*²: quidem *D*⁴: Quirites Gulielmus: quieti Welz.

¹ Livy implies that the speech which he has reported above was delivered in the Senate.

the plebeian tribunes help our enemies, and the Veientes find in Rome those succours which they are seeking to no purpose in Etruria. B.C. 403

“Could anything happen which would so please the Veientes as that factions should spring up, first in the City of Rome, and then, as though by contagion, in the camp? But our enemies, by Heaven, are so well disciplined that no weariness of the blockade nor even of kingly rule has occasioned the smallest revolt among them; neither has the Etruscans’ denial of help provoked their spirit; for whosoever prompts sedition shall forthwith die the death; nor shall any man there have licence to say what is said with impunity to you. Death by cudgelling is the wage of him who forsakes the standards or quits his post; but those who advise the men to abandon their standards and desert the camp gain a hearing, not with one or two soldiers, but with whole armies, openly, in public meetings; so accustomed are you to hear with complacency whatever a tribune says, even if it tends to betray the City and to undo the state; and captivated by the charm of that authority, you suffer any wickedness whatsoever to lurk beneath it. It only remains for them to utter in camp and in the presence of the soldiers the view which they noisily publish here, and to corrupt the armies and not to suffer them to obey their leaders. For in the upshot liberty has come to mean at Rome, that a man respect neither senate nor laws, nor ancestral customs, nor institutions of the fathers, nor military discipline.”

VII. Appius was already holding his own with the tribunes of the plebs, even in public meetings,¹ when a sudden disaster, from a source which could in causa et concordiam ordinum maiorem ardoremque 2 ad obsidendos pertinacius Veios fecit. Nam cum agger promotus ad urbem vineaeque tantum non iam

 iniunctae moenibus essent, dum opera interdiu fiunt intentius quam nocte custodiuntur, patefacta repente porta ingens multitudo facibus maxime armata ignes 3 coniecit, horaeque momento simul aggerem ac vineas, tam longi temporis opus, incendium hausit; multique
 ibi mortales nequiquam opem ferentes ferro ignique 4 absumpti sunt. Quod ubi Romam est nuntiatum, maestitiam omnibus, senatui curam metumque iniecit, ne tum vero sustineri nec in urbe seditio nec in castris possēt et tribuni plebis velut ab se victae 5 rei publicae insultarent, cum repente quibus census equester erat, equi publici non erant adsignati, concilio prius inter sese habito senatum adeunt factaque dicendi potestate equis se suis stipendia facturos
 6 promittunt. Quibus cum amplissimis verbis gratiae ab senatu actae essent famaue ea forum atque urbem pervasisset, subito ad curiam concursus fit 7 plebis; pedestris ordinis aiunt nunc esse operam¹
 rei publicae extra ordinem polliceri, seu Veios seu quo alio ducere velint; si Veios ducti sint, negant

¹ aiunt nunc esse operam Cuper: se aiunt nunc esse oper-
 amque Ω: seiciunt nunc esse operamque B.

least have been anticipated, befell the army before Veii, giving Appius the advantage in the argument, while it increased the mutual good-will of the orders and their ardour for a more vigorous prosecution of the siege. For when they had pushed forward the terrace towards the town, and had all but brought the mantlets into contact with the walls,—more intent upon erecting their works by day than on guarding them by night,—the gate was suddenly flung open, and a vast horde, most of them armed with torches, hurled fire on the works, and in an hour's time terrace and mantlets, that had taken so long to make, were consumed in the flames; and many men perished by the sword or the fire, in vain efforts to save them. When the news of this came to Rome, it filled the City with sadness, the senate with anxiety and apprehension, lest they might now indeed be unable to check the disaffection, either in the City or the camp, and the tribunes might crow over the commonwealth as though they had overthrown it; when lo! those who were of equestrian rating, but had not received horses from the state, having first taken counsel together, came to the senate, and being granted a hearing, volunteered to serve on their own horses. These men had no sooner received a vote of thanks from the senate, in the most honourable terms, and the report of it had spread to the Forum and the City, than the plebeians suddenly ran together to the Curia, and declared that it was now the turn of the foot-soldiers to proffer extraordinary service to the state, whether it would have them march to Veii, or anywhere else; if they should be led to Veii, they promised that they would not quit their ground

B.C. 403

A.U.C.
351

se inde prius quam capta urbe hostium redituros 8 esse. Tum vero iam superfundenti se laetitiae vix temperatum est; non enim, sicut equites, dato magi-9 stratibus negotio laudari iussi, neque aut in curiam vocati quibus responsum daretur, aut limine curiae continebatur senatus; sed pro se quisque ex superiore loco ad multitudinem in comitio stantem voce mani-10 busque significare publicam laetitiam, beatam urbem Romanam et invictam et aeternam illa concordia dicere, laudare equites, laudare plebem, diem ipsum laudibus ferre, victam esse fateri comitatem benigni-11 tatemque senatus. Certatim patribus plebique manare gaudio lacrimae, donec revocatis in curiam.
 patribus senatus consultum factum est ut tribuni militares contione advocata peditibus equitibusque 12 gratias agerent, memorem pietatis eorum erga patriam dicerent senatum fore; placere autem omnibus his voluntariam extra ordinem professis militiam aera procedere; et equiti certus numerus aeris est ad-13 signatus. Tum primum equis suis merere equites coeperunt. Voluntarius ductus exercitus Veios non amissa modo restituit opera, sed nova etiam instituit.
 Ab urbe commeatus intentiore quam antea subvehi cura, ne quid tam bene merito exercitui ad usum deesset.

A.U.C.
352

VIII. Insequens annus tribunos militum consulari potestate habuit C. Servilium Ahalam tertium Q.
 Servilium L. Verginium Q. Sulpicium A. Manlium
 2 iterum M.' Sergium¹ iterum. His tribunis, dum

¹ M.' Sergium a Sigonius (Sergium C.I.L. i², p. 116): m
 sergium (or marcum sergium) Ω : martum sergium F: marcum seruium DL.

¹ i. e. from the steps that led down to the Comitium.

until they had taken the enemy's city. Then B.C. 403 indeed the senate could scarce control its already overflowing joy; for they did not, as with the knights, issue an order to the magistrates to thank them, nor did they call them into the Curia to receive an answer, neither did the senate keep within the House; but each for himself cried out from above,¹ to the multitude standing in the Comitium, and by speech and gesture signified the general joy. Rome was blest, they said, and invincible and eternal, by reason of this noble harmony; they praised the knights, they praised the plebeians, they extolled the very day itself, and confessed that the courtesy and good-will of the senate had been surpassed. Fathers and commoners mingled their tears of joy, till the Fathers were recalled into the senate-house, and decreed that the military tribunes should hold an assembly and thank the infantry and the knights, and say to them that the senate would remember their loyalty to their country, and that it was voted that all who had volunteered to serve out of their due order should receive pay. The knights, too, were granted a definite money allowance. Then for the first time cavalry-men began to serve on their own horses. The volunteer army, having marched to Veii, not only replaced the works that had been lost, but added new ones. The city dispatched provisions with more than its former zeal, that nothing might be lacking to an army that had deserved so well.

VIII. The ensuing year had for consular tribunes B.C. 402
Gaius Servilius Ahala (for the third time), Quintus Servilius, Lucius Verginius, Quintus Sulpicius, Aulus Manlius (for the second time), and Manius Sergius

cura omnium in Veiens bellum intenta est, neglectum Anxuri¹ praesidium vacationibus militum et Volscos mercatores volgo receptando proditis repente por-3 tarum custodibus oppressum est. Minus militum periit, quia praeter aegros lixarum in modum omnes 4 per agros vicinasque urbes negotiabantur. Nec Veii melius gesta res, quod tum caput omnium curarum publicarum erat; nam et duces Romani plus inter se irarum quam adversus hostes animi habuerunt, et auctum est bellum adventu repentino Capenatium
 5 atque Faliscorum. Hi duo Etruriae populi, quia proximi regione erant, devictis Veii bello quoque 6 Romano se proximos fore credentes, Falisci propria etiam causa infesti, quod Fidenati bello se iam antea immiscuerant, per legatos ultro citroque missos iure iurando inter se obligati, cum exercitibus necopinato
 7 ad Veios accessere. Forte ea regione qua² M.
 Sergius tribunus militum praeerat castra adorti sunt ingentemque terrorem intulere, quia Etruriam omnem excitam sedibus magna mole adesse Romani crediderant. Eadem opinio Veientes in urbe concitavit.
 8 Ita ancipiti proelio castra Romana oppugnabantur;
 concursantesque cum huc atque illuc signa transferrent, nec Veientem satis cohibere intra munitiones nec suis munimentis arcere vim ac tueri se ab ex-

¹ Anxuri *a*² Bekker: anxuri (or anxuri, or anxiri) Ω (not in V).

² qua M. Sergius Sigonius: qua m sergius HDL: quam sergius *M*¹ or *M*² PFBa: qua sergius MUOE.

¹ See IV. xvii. 11.

BOOK V. VIII. 2-8

(for the second time). In their term of office, while everyone was intent on the war with Veii, the garrison at Anxur was neglected; soldiers were given furlough, Volscian traders were admitted without discrimination, and, the sentinels at the gates being suddenly overpowered, the town was taken. Not many soldiers perished, because they were all, except the sick, occupied, like sutlers, with trafficking in the country-side and the towns near by. Nor were things any better at Veii, which was at that time the nation's chief concern; for the Roman commanders showed more jealousy of one another than spirit in dealing with the enemy, whose forces moreover were enlarged by the unexpected accession of the Capenates and the Faliscans. These two Etruscan peoples, being nearest in situation, believed that if the Veientes were conquered it would be their turn next to face a Roman invasion. The Faliscans, besides, had incurred hostility on their own account, because they had been mixed up before in the war with Fidenæ.¹ So they exchanged embassies, bound themselves by an oath, and their armies suddenly appeared before Veii. It happened that they attacked the camp at that point where the tribune Manius Sergius was in command, and great was the terror they inspired, since the Romans thought that all Etruria had risen and was come with a mighty array against them. The same belief roused up the Veientes in the town. Thus a two-fold attack was directed against the camp. The soldiers rallied into groups, facing now this way and now that, yet were unable either quite to confine the Veientes within the siege-lines, or to ward off the attack upon their own defences and protect

- A.U.C. 352 9 teriore poterant hoste. Una spes erat si ex maioribus castris subveniretur, ut diversae legiones aliae adversus Capenatem ac Faliscum, aliae contra eruptionem oppidanorum pugnarent; sed castris praeerat 10 Verginius, privatim Sergio invisus infestusque. Is, cum pleraque castella oppugnata, superatas munitiones, utrimque invehi hostem nuntiaretur, in armis milites tenuit, si opus foret auxilio collegam dictitans 11 ad se missurum. Huius adrogantiam pertinacia alterius aequabat, qui, ne quam opem ab inimico videretur petisse, vinci ab hoste quam vincere per civem 12 maluit. Diu in medio caesi milites; postremo desertis munitionibus perpauci in maiora castra, pars maxima atque ipse Sergius Romam pertenderunt. Ubi cum omnem culpam in collegam inclinaret, acciri Verginium ex castris, interea praeesse legatos placuit. 13 Acta deinde in senatu res est certatumque inter collegas maledictis. Pauci rei publicae, plerique¹ huic atque illi, ut quosque studium privatim aut gratia occupaverat,² adsunt.

IX. Primores patrum, sive culpa sive infelicitate imperatorum tam ignominiosa clades accepta esset, censuere non expectandum iustum tempus comitorum, sed extemplo novos tribunos militum creandos themselves from the enemy outside. Their only B.C. 402 hope was if help should come from the larger camp, so that the legions might face different ways, some of them confronting the Capenates and Faliscans, and others the sortie of the townsfolk. But that camp was under the command of Verginius, who was privately hated by Sergius and returned his enmity. This man, though word was brought that many bastions had been stormed and the ramparts scaled, and that the enemy were attacking on both sides, held his troops under arms, saying that if his colleague needed help he would let him know. His pride found a match in the other's obstinacy, and Sergius, lest he should seem to have required any aid of his rival, preferred defeat at the hands of the enemy to victory gained through a fellow citizen. For a long time the Romans were slaughtered between the two attacking armies; finally they abandoned their works, and a very few escaped into the larger camp, while Sergius himself, with the chief part of his men, kept on to Rome. It was there decided, on his throwing all the blame upon his colleague, to summon Verginius from camp, and in the meanwhile put lieutenants in command of it. The affair was then debated in the senate and the colleagues heaped abuse on one another. There were but few who spoke for the commonwealth: most of them argued for one or the other disputant, according as each was swayed by private interest or favour.

¹ plerique inserted by Kiehl.

² occupaverat ς : occupaverant U: occupauerunt Ω (not in V).

IX. The leading senators held, that whether the fault or the misfortune of the commanders were the cause of this shameful disaster, they ought not to await the regular time for elections, but proceed at once to choose new military tribunes, to begin esse, qui kalendis Octobribus magistratum occipe-2 rent. In quam sententiam cum pedibus iretur, ceteri

 3 tribuni militum nihil contradicere; at enimvero Sergius Verginiusque, propter quos paenitere magi-stratum eius anni senatum apparebat, primo deprecari ignominiam, deinde intercedere senatus consulto, negare se ante idus Decembres, sollemnem ineundis 4 magistratibus diem, honore abituros esse. Inter haec tribuni plebis, cum in concordia hominum secundisque rebus civitatis inviti silentium tenuissent, feroces repente minari tribunis militum, nisi in auctoritate senatus essent, se in vincla eos duci iussuros esse.
 5 Tum C. Servilius Ahala tribunus militum: "Quod ad vos attinet, tribuni plebis, minasque vestras, ne ego libenter experirer quam non plus in iis iuris 6 quam in vobis animi esset; sed nefas est tendere adversus auctoritatem senatus. Proinde et vos desinite inter nostra certamina locum iniuriae quaerere, et collegae aut facient quod censet senatus, aut, si pertinacius tendent, dictatorem extemplo dicam qui 7 eos abire magistratu cogat." Cum omnium adsensu comprobata oratio esset gauderentque patres sine tribuniciae potestatis terriculis inventam esse aliam 8 vim maiorem ad coercendos magistratus, victi consensu omnium comitia tribunorum militum habuere
 qui kalendis Octobribus magistratum occiperent, seque ante eam diem magistratu abdicavere.

¹ The senatus consultum was no more than a 'resolution' which the presiding magistrate might, if he chose, refuse to carry out.

their magistracy on the first of October. While the B.C. 402 members were voting for this proposal, the other military tribunes raised no objection; but of all people Sergius and Virginius, the very men on account of whom it was evident that the senate was disgusted with the magistrates of that year, first begged to be spared the humiliation, then vetoed the senate's decree,¹ declaring that they would not resign their authority before the thirteenth of December, the accustomed day for entering upon office. Whereupon the tribunes of the plebs, who so long as harmony prevailed and the affairs of the City prospered, had reluctantly held their tongues, suddenly broke out and threatened the tribunes of the soldiers, that unless they submitted to the senate
 they would send them to prison. Then Gaius Servilius Ahala, a military tribune, said: "So far as concerns you, tribunes of the commons, and your menaces, I should indeed willingly put it to the proof how you have on your side as little legality
 as courage; but it is impious to oppose the authority of the senate. Accordingly do you give over seeking in our quarrels occasion for working mischief, and my colleagues shall either do as the senate decrees, or if they persist in stubborn opposition, I will forthwith name a dictator, to compel them to lay down their authority." This speech was universally approved, and the Fathers rejoiced that they needed
 not the trumpery threats of the tribunician power, but had found another and a greater force to coerce the magistrates; and the latter, overborne by the unanimity of feeling, held an election of military tribunes, to begin service on October the first, and before that date resigned their office.

A.U.C.
604-606

esset Gulussae Romanorum auxilia iuvantis. P. Scipio Aemilianus cum aedilitatem peteret, consul a populo dictus. Quoniam per annos consuli fieri non licebat, cum magno certamine suffragantis plebis ¹ et repugnantibus ei ² aliquamdiu patribus, legibus solutus et consul creatus. M'. Manilius ³ aliquot urbes circumpositas Carthagini expugnavit. Pseudophilippus in Macedonia, caeso cum exercitu P. ⁴ Iuventio praetore, ab Q. Caecilio victus captusque est, et revicta ⁵ Macedonia.

L[IBER L

Per socios popu[li R. Andriscus ex Thessalia pulsus in ultim[a]m T[hraciam].⁶ De tribunis pl. lat[a est] l[ex] At[inia]. Prusia occiso Nicomedes re-
col. V gno Bithy]niae potitus ⁷ est. Ad Attalum regem Pergami] et Prusiam <am>endati ⁸ sunt legati Marc[us Licinius poda]gricus, A. Hostilius Mancinus capite icto test]a quondam, L. Manlius Volso stolidus. Cunctari] legationem dixerunt, M. Cato respondit

¹ plebis Perizonius: legis NPIR.

² ei Jahn: et MSS.

³ M'. Manilius Sigonius: M. aemilius NPIR.

⁴ P. Gruter: m. NPR.

⁵ revicta Roszbach: relicta NPR: recepta Leidensis.

⁶ Thraciam Roszbach: c . . . MS.

⁷ potitus Kornemann: positus MS.

⁸ Pergami et Prusiam amendati Roszbach: in pugnamementasi MS: in Pergamenos missi Grenfell-Hunt: deductum in pugnam Gundermann: a Romanis in Pergamum Kornemann: et Prusian Pergamum Reid.

X. The consular tribuneship of Lucius Valerius B.C. 491
 Potitus (for the fourth term), Marcus Furius Camillus (for the second ¹), Manius Aemilius Mamercus (for the third), Gnaeus Cornelius Cossus (for the second), Caeso Fabius Ambustus, and Lucius Julius Iulus,² was a time of great activity both at home and in the field. For they made war at many points simultaneously, before Veii, at Capena, at Falerii, and in the Volscian country—to recover Anxur from the enemy; and in Rome both the levy and the payment of the war-tax occasioned difficulties, a quarrel sprang up over the co-optation of plebeian tribunes, and the trials of the two who had lately exercised consular powers aroused no small commotion. The first concern of the military tribunes was to levy troops, and they not only enrolled the younger men, but also compelled the seniors to enlist for service in guarding the City. But the more they increased the number of the soldiers, the more money they required for pay. This they tried to collect by taxation; but those who remained at home contributed with reluctance, because they had also in defence of the City to perform the labour of soldiers and serve the commonwealth. To make this obligation, heavy in itself, seem yet more grievous, the tribunes of the plebs delivered seditious speeches, in which they alleged that the senators had established pay for the troops for this reason, that they might ruin one half of the plebs with fighting and the other half with taxation.
 They were now drawing out a single war into its third year, and were purposely misconducting it, that they might conduct it the longer. Again, with one levy they had enrolled armies for four wars, and

A.U.C.
353

- exercitus scriptos et pueros quoque ac senes ex-8 tractos. Iam non aestatis nec hiemis discrimen esse, ne ulla quies unquam miserae plebi sit, quae nunc¹ 9 etiam vectigalis ad ultimum facta sit, ut cum con-fecta labore vulneribus postremo aetate corpora rettulerint incultaque omnia diutino dominorum desiderio domi invenerint, tributum ex adfecta re familiari pendant aeraque militaria, velut fenore accepta, multiplicia rei publicae reddant.
- 10 Inter dilectum tributumque et occupatos animos
 maiorum rerum curis comitiis tribunorum plebis 11 numerus expleri nequii.² Pugnatum inde in loca vacua ut patricii cooptarentur. Postquam obtineri non poterat, tamen labefactandae legis³ causa effectum est ut cooptarentur tribuni plebis C. Lacerius et
 M. Acutius, haud dubie patriciorum opibus.

XI. Fors ita tulit ut eo anno tribunus plebis Cn.
 Trebonius esset, qui nomini ac familiae debitum 2 praestare videretur Treboniae legis patrociniū. Is quod petissent patres quondam⁴ primo incepto repulsi, tandem⁵ tribunos militum expugnasse ait⁶
 vociferans legem Treboniam sublatam et cooptatos
 tribunos plebis non suffragiis populi sed imperio

¹ quae nunc Ald.: quae ne Ω : quin *Vorm.*² P²FUB.

² nequii ς : nequit (or nequid) Ω .

³ legis Madvig: legis tribuniciae Ω .

⁴ quondam Haupt: quidam (omitted in a) Ω .

⁵ tandem Weissenborn: tamen Ω .

⁶ expugnasse ait (expugnasse ς) Lutcherbach: expugnasse sent Ω .

¹ From the beginning no patrician might become a tribune
 of the plebs (II. xxxiii. 1) and in 448 the Trebonian law forbade co-optation to that office (III. lxxv. 4).

had haled away even boys and old men. Now they B.C. 401 were confounding winter with summer, to allow no rest ever to the unhappy commons, on whom finally they had even imposed a tax ; that when they should drag home their bodies spent with toil, with wounds, and at last with old age, and should then find all things gone to waste in the long absence of the owners, they might pay tribute out of their diminished property, and return to the state many times, as it were with usury, the wages they had received as soldiers.

What with the levy and the tax and the weightier cares that preoccupied men's minds, they were unable on the day of election to return the full number of plebeian tribunes. An effort was then made to obtain the co-optation of patricians for the vacant places. When this failed, nevertheless, in order to invalidate the law, it was brought about that Gaius Lacerius and Marcus Acutius should be chosen tribunes, without doubt through patrician influence. ¹

XI. It so happened that in that year one of the tribunes was Gnaeus Trebonius, whose name and family seemed to make it his duty to defend the Trebonian law. This man said that what the Fathers had formerly aimed at (and had been foiled on their first attempting), the tribunes of the soldiers had finally extorted ; he asseverated that the Trebonian law had been done away with, and that the tribunes of the plebs had been appointed not by the votes of the people but at the dictation of the nobles ; that things had come to such a pass, that they must perforce have either patricians or the satellites of patricians for tribunes of the plebs ; their sacred laws were being taken

LIVY

A.U.C.
353

- patriciorum; eo¹ revolvi rem ut aut patricii aut patriciorum adseculae habendi tribuni plebis sint; 3 eripi sacratas leges, extorqueri tribuniciam potestatem; id fraude patriciorum, scelere ac proditione collegarum factum arguere.
- 4 Cum arderent invidia non patres modo sed etiam tribuni plebis, cooptati pariter et qui cooptaverant, tum ex collegio tres, P. Curatius M. Metilius M. Minucius, trepidi rerum suarum, in Sergium Verginiumque, prioris anni tribunos militares, incurrunt; in eos ab se iram plebis invidiamque die dicta avertunt.
- 5 Quibus dilectus, quibus tributum, quibus diutina militia longinquitasque belli sit gravis, qui clade accepta ad Veios doleant, qui amissis liberis fratribus, propinquis adfinibus, lugubres domos habeant, his publici privatique doloris exsequendi ius potestatemque ex duobus noxiis capitibus datam ab se 6 memorant. Omnium namque malorum in Sergio Verginioque causas esse; nec id accusatores² magis arguere quam fateri reos, qui noxii ambo alter in alterum causam conferant, fugam Sergi Verginius, 7 Sergius proditionem increpans Vergini. Quorum adeo incredibilem amentiam fuisse ut multo veri similis sit compecto eam rem et communi fraude 8 patriciorum actam. Ab his et prius datum locum Veientibus ad incendenda opera belli trahendi causa,

¹ eo Weissenborn: et Ω: et eo Vorm.? *D*⁴.

² accusatores Giers: accusatorem Ω.

¹ Perhaps these three were held accountable for the illegal step which the college had taken.

BOOK V. XI. 2-8

away, the tribunician power wrested from them. B.C. 401
This was done, he declared, by the knavery of the patricians, the rascality and the treason of his colleagues.

Men were burning with resentment, not only against the patricians, but also against the tribunes of the plebs, both those who had been co-opted and those who had co-opted them, when three of the college, Publius Curatius, Marcus Metilius, and Marcus Minucius, being alarmed at their own situation,¹ fell violently upon Sergius and Verginius, the military tribunes of the previous year, and by appointing them a day for trial turned against them the anger and displeasure which the plebs had evinced towards themselves. They reminded their hearers, that those who were aggrieved by the levy, or the tax, or the protracted service and the long duration of the war, those who sorrowed for the calamity that befell at Veii, those whose houses were in mourning for the loss of sons, brothers, kinsmen or connexions,—that all those now had the right and the power, thanks to the speakers, of avenging the nation's private wrongs and their own on the two culprits; for of all their sufferings Sergius and Verginius were the cause; and this their accusers were not more forward to maintain than the defendants to confess, who, equally guilty, threw the blame on one another, Verginius taxing Sergius with his flight, while Sergius complained of Verginius's treachery. Their madness had been so incredible, that it was much more probable that they had done the thing upon agreement, with the collusion of the senators; who having before given opportunity to the Veientes to set fire to their works, in order to

A.U.C.
353

- et nunc proditum exercitum, tradita Faliscis Romana 9 castra. Omnia fieri ut consenescat ad Veios iuventus nec de agris nec de aliis commodis plebis ferre
 ad populum tribuni frequentiaque urbana celebrare actiones et resistere conspirationi patriciorum possint.
 10 Praeiudicium iam de reis et ab senatu et ab populo 11 Romano et ab ipsorum collegio¹ factum esse; nam et senatus consulto eos ab re publica remotos esse, et recusantes abdicare se magistratu dictatoris metu
 ab collegis coercitos esse, et populum Romanum tribunos creasse qui non idibus Decembribus, die sollemni, sed extemplo kalendis Octobribus magi-stratum occiperent, quia stare diutius res publica his 12 manentibus in magistratu non posset; et tamen eos, tot iudiciis confossos praedamnatosque venire ad
 populi iudicium et existimare defunctos se esse satisque poenarum dedisse quod duobus mensibus 13 citius privati facti sint, neque intellegere nocendi sibi diutius tum potestatem ereptam esse, non poenam
 inrogatam; quippe et collegis abrogatum imperium, 14 qui certe nihil deliquissent. Illos repeterent animos Quirites quos recenti clade accepta habuissent, cum fuga trepidum, plenum vulnerum ac pavoris² incidentem portis exercitum viderint non fortunam aut

¹ collegio Walters: collegiis (collegis *D*² or *D*⁴*a*²) Ω.

² pavoris Gronov.: pauore Ω.

prolong the war, had now betrayed the army and delivered up a Roman camp to the Faliscans. They were doing everything to wear out the young men before Veii, and prevent the tribunes from bringing before the people the question of land and other advantages to the plebs, and from pushing their measures in well-attended assemblies and thwarting the conspiracy of the patricians. Judgment was already given against the accused both by the senate and by the Roman People, and also by their own college; for the senate had by its decree removed them from authority, and when they refused to abdicate their office, their colleagues had coerced them by threatening to appoint a dictator, and the Roman People had elected tribunes to assume their duties, not on the thirteenth of December, the usual date, but immediately, on October the first, believing that the state could endure no longer if the incumbents should remain in place; yet, in spite of all, these men, stigmatized and fore-judged by so many adverse verdicts, presented themselves for trial by the people, and fancied that they were quit and sufficiently mulcted because they were made private citizens two months before their time; not perceiving that they had then merely been deprived of the power to do further mischief, not punished, since their colleagues, too, were turned out of office, though they had certainly done no wrong. Let the Quirites call back the spirit they had shown when the recent calamity had occurred, when they had beheld the flight and confusion of their troops, as they stumbled, wounded and dismayed, through the City gates, accusing neither fortune nor any of the gods, but these their

A.U.C. 15 quemquam deorum, sed hos duces accusantem. Pro 353 certo se habere neminem in contione stare qui illo die non caput domum fortunasque L. Vergini ac 16 M.' Sergi sit exsecratus detestatusque. Minime convenire quibus iratos quisque deos precatus sit in iis sua potestate, cum liceat et oporteat, non uti.
 Nunquam deos ipsos admovere nocentibus manus;
 satis esse si occasione ulciscendi laesos arment.

A.U.C. XII. His orationibus incitata plebs denis milibus
 354 aeris gravis reos condemnat, nequiquam Sergio
 Martem communem belli fortunamque accusante,
 Verginio deprecante ne infelicior domi quam militiae
 2 esset. In hos versa ira populi cooptationis tribu-norum fraudisque contra legem Treboniam factae memoriam obscuram fecit.

3 Victores tribuni, ut praesentem mercedem iudicii plebes haberet, legem agrariam promulgant tribu-4 tumque conferri prohibent, cum tot exercitibus sti-pendio opus esset resque militiae¹ ita prospere gererentur ut nullo bello veniretur ad exitum spei.
 Namque Veiis castra quae amissa erant recuperata castellis praesidiisque firmanentur; praecerant tribuni
 5 militum M.' Aemilius² et K. Fabius.³ A M. Furio in Faliscis, a⁴ Cn. Cornelio in Capenate agro hostes nulli extra moenia inventi; praedae actae incendiis-que villarum ac frugum vastati fines; oppida nec
 6 oppugnata nec obsessa sunt. At in Volscis depopu-

¹ militiae Gronovius: miliae H: militia Ω.

² M.' Aemilius a: m. (or m̄.) aemilius (aemilius B) Ω.

³ K. Fabius cf. chap. x, § 1: q. (or quintus) fabius Ω.

⁴ a M¹: et Ω.

leaders. They were sure that there was not a man B.C. 401 present in the assembly who had not on that day cursed and execrated the lives, the houses, and the fortunes of Lucius Verginius and Manius Sergius.
 It was not reasonable that their hearers, having a legal and moral right in the matter, should not use their power against those upon whom each one of them had invoked the wrath of Heaven. The gods themselves never laid hands upon the guilty; it was enough if they armed with opportunity those who had been wronged.

XII. Incited by these speeches, the plebs con- B.C. 400
 demned the accused to pay each a fine of 10,000 pounds of bronze. It was in vain that Sergius blamed Fortune and the common chance of war, while Verginius begged that he might not be more unlucky at home than he had been in the campaign.
 On them the wrath of the people was poured out,
 and the co-optation of the tribunes and the evasion
 of the Trebonian law were almost forgotten.

The victorious tribunes, that the plebs might have an immediate reward for its judgment, proposed a land-law and forbade the gathering of the war-tax, notwithstanding that pay was needed for so many armies, whose campaigning, though successful, yet failed to realize the desired end in any war. Thus, at Veii, they recovered the lost camp and strengthened it with fortresses and garrisons, led by the military tribunes Manius Aemilius and Caeso Fabius; Marcus Furius in the Faliscan country, and Gnaeus Cornelius in the territory of Capena, meeting no enemies afield, drove off booty, and burning farmhouses and crops, laid waste the land, but the towns
 they neither assaulted nor besieged; in the Volscian

lato agro Anxur nequiquam oppugnatum loco alto situm et, postquam vis inrita erat, vallo fossaque obsideri coeptum. Valerio Potito Volsci provincia evenerat.

- 7 Hoc statu militarium rerum seditio intestina maiore mole coorta quam bella tractabantur; et cum tributum conferri per tribunos non posset¹ nec stipendium imperatoribus mitteretur aeraque militaria flagitaret miles, haud procul erat quin castra quoque
8 urbanae seditionis contagione turbarentur. Inter has iras plebis in patres cum tribuni plebi nunc illud tempus esse dicerent stabiliendae libertatis et ab Sergiis Verginiisque ad plebeios viros fortes ac
9 strenuos transferendi summi honoris, non tamen ultra processum est quam ut unus ex plebe, usurpandi iuris causa, P. Licinius Calvus tribunus militum consulari potestate crearetur; ceteri patricii creati, P. Manlius² L. Titinius³ P. Maelius L. Furius Medullinus L. Publilius⁴ Volscus. Ipsa plebes mirabatur se tantam rem obtinuisse, non is modo qui creatus erat, vir nullis ante honoribus usus, vetus tantum 12 senator et aetate iam gravis; nec satis constat cur primus ac potissimus ad novum delibandum honorem sit habitus. Alii Cn. Corneli fratris, qui tribunus militum priore anno fuerat triplexque stipendium

¹ posset D? ς : possit Ω .

² Manlius *D*¹ (or *D*²) ς : manilius Ω : mamilius PFUB: mamlius (or manilius) D.

³ L. Titinius Sigon. (v. xviii. 2, and Diocl. xiv. xc. 1) p. titinius Ω : et p. titinius EDA.

⁴ Publilius Sigon. (C.I.L. i², p. 116): popilius Ω : popilius U.

¹ Or, perhaps, step-brother.

country, however, after ravaging the fields, they B.C. 400
made a futile attack on Anxur, which was seated on an eminence, and finding force to be unavailing, began to invest it with a stockade and trench, under Valerius Potitus, who had got the command against the Volsci.

While military affairs were in this posture, a quarrel that broke out at home aroused more energy than went to their making of wars; and since the tax could not be taken up, on account of the tribunes, and the generals were sent no money,
while the soldiers were clamouring for their pay,
the camp, too, was like to have been disrupted by the contagion of mutiny in the City. In the midst of this hostility which the plebs felt towards the patricians, though the plebeian tribunes said that the time was now come to establish liberty, and to transfer the highest office from such as Sergius and Verginius to stout and courageous commoners, yet they got no further than the election of one plebeian
(by way of asserting their right), namely, Publius Licinius Calvus, to be military tribune with consular powers; the others chosen were patricians: Publius Manlius, Lucius Titinius, Publius Maelius, Lucius Furius Medullinus, Lucius Publilius Volscus. The plebeians themselves were amazed that they had gained so important a point, and not alone the man who had been chosen, one that had held no offices before, but was only a senator of long standing, now well on in years. There is no unanimity of opinion
why he was selected as the first and fittest to taste of the new honours. Some think it was the favour of his cousin¹ Gnaeus Cornelius, who as tribune of the soldiers the year before had granted triple pay

A.U.C.
355

- equitibus dederat, gratia extractum ad tantum honorem credunt, alii orationem ipsum tempestivam de concordia ordinum patribus plebique gratam habuisse.
- 13 Hac victoria comitiorum exsultantes tribuni plebis quod maxime rem publicam impediabat de tributis remiserunt. Conlatum oboedienter missumque ad exercitum est.

- XIII. Anxur in Volscis brevi receptum est neglectis die festo custodiis urbis. Insignis annus hieme gelida ac nivosa fuit, adeo ut viae clausae, Tiberis innavigabilis fuerit. Annona ex ante convecta copia nihil mutavit. Et quia P. Licinius, ut ceperat haec tumultuose magistratum maiore gaudio plebis quam indignatione patrum, ita etiam gessit, dulcedo in vasit proximis comitiis tribunorum militum plebeiorum creandi. Unus M. Veturius ex patriciis candidatus locum tenuit: plebeios alios tribunos militum consulari potestate omnes fere centuriae dixere, M. Pomponium Cn. Duillium Voleronem Publilium¹ Cn. Genucium L. Atilium.
- 4 Tristem hiemem, sive ex intemperie caeli raptim mutatione in contrarium facta sive alia qua de causa gravis pestilensque omnibus animalibus aestas ex-
- 5 cepit. Cuius insanabili perniciie quando nec causa nec finis inveniebatur, libri Sibyllini ex senatus con-

¹ Publilium Sigon.: publicium (or -litium, or -licum) Ω.

¹ In chap. vii. § 5, there is no mention of pay; Livy means that the cavalryman received thrice the pay of the foot-soldier.

to the cavalrymen,¹ that got him his promotion to so great an office ; others, that he himself made a timely speech on the harmony of the orders, which pleased both patricians and plebeians. Overjoyed at their victory in this election, the tribunes of the plebs withdrew that opposition to the tax which was the greatest obstacle to the business of the state, and it was obediently paid in and dispatched to the army. B.C. 399

XIII. Anxur of the Volsci was speedily recaptured, a holiday having relaxed the vigilance of their guard. This year was remarkable for so cold and snowy a winter, that the roads were blocked and the Tiber became unnavigable. The price of corn, owing to the supply which they had brought in before, did not go up. Publius Licinius had obtained his magistracy without any disorders, rejoicing the commons more than he offended the patricians, and in the same spirit he conducted it ; the people therefore became desirous of returning plebeians at the next election of consular tribunes. Marcus Veturius was the sole patrician candidate to get in ; all the other military tribunes with consular authority were commoners, as the result of an all but unanimous vote of the centuries. Their names were Marcus Pomponius, Gnaeus Duillius, Volero Publilius, Gnaeus Genucius, Lucius Atilius.

The severe winter was succeeded, whether in consequence of the sudden change from such inclement weather to the opposite extreme, or for some other reason, by a summer that was noxious and baleful to all living creatures. Unable to discover what caused the incurable ravages of this distemper, or would put an end to them, the senate voted to consult the Sibylline Books. The duumvirs

A.U.C.
355

- 6 sulto aditi sunt. Duumviri sacris faciundis lectisternio tunc primum in urbe Romana facto per dies
octo Apollinem Latonamque et Dianam, Herculem
Mercurium atque Neptunum tribus quam amplissime
7 tum apparari poterat stratis lectis placavere. Privatim quoque id sacrum celebratum est. Tota urbe patentibus ianuis promiscuoque usu rerum omnium
in propatulo posito, notos ignotosque passim advenas
in hospitium ductos ferunt et cum inimicis quoque benigne ac comiter sermones habitos, iurgiis ac 8 litibus temperatum; vinctis quoque dempta in eos dies vincula; religioni deinde fuisse quibus eam opem di tulissent vinciri.
- 9 Interim ad Veios terror multiplex fuit tribus in unum bellis conlatis. Namque eodem quo antea modo circa munimenta cum repente Capenates Faliscique subsidio venissent, adversus tres exercitus
10 ancipiti proelio pugnatum est. Ante omnia adiuvit memoria damnationis Sergi ac Vergini. Itaque e maioribus ¹ castris, unde antea cessatum fuerat, brevi spatio circumductae copiae Capenates in vallum Romanum versos ab tergo adgrediuntur; inde pugna 11 coepta et Faliscis intulit terrorem, trepidantesque eruptio ex castris opportune facta avertit. Repulsos deinde insecuti victores ingentem ediderunt caedem.
12 Nec ita multo post iam forte ² oblati populatores 13 Capenatis agri reliquias pugnae absumpsere. Et

¹ e maioribus Perizonius: maioribus Ω.

² iam forte Conway: iam palantes (palentes H) veluti forte Ω.

¹ From lectus, "couch" and sternere, "to spread." The images of the gods were placed on banqueting couches and served with food.

in charge of the sacred rites then celebrated the first lectisternium¹ ever held in Rome, and for the space of eight days sacrificed to Apollo, to Latona and Diana, to Hercules, to Mercury and to Neptune, spreading couches for them with all the splendour then attainable. They also observed the rite in their homes. All through the City, they say, doors stood wide open, all kinds of viands were set out for general consumption, all comers were welcomed, whether known or not, and men even exchanged kind and courteous words with personal enemies; there was a truce to quarrelling and litigation; even prisoners were loosed from their chains for those days, and they scrupled thenceforth to imprison men whom the gods has thus befriended.

Meantime alarms were multiplied at Veii, where three wars were rolled into one. For, precisely as before, the Capenates and the Faliscans came suddenly to raise the siege, and the Romans fought about their works against three armies, which attacked them on both sides. What helped them most, was the recollection how Sergius and Verginius had been condemned. And so from the principal camp, where the delay had occurred on the former occasion, troops were dispatched by a short circuit and fell upon the Capenates in the rear, as they faced the rampart of the Romans. Beginning there, the battle carried terror even among the Faliscans, who were wavering, when a timely sally from the camp put them to flight. Then, as they retreated, the victors pursued them with great slaughter; and not long after a party that was raiding the territory of the Capenates happened to fall in with them and destroyed such as had survived the battle. Of the

A.U.C.
355

Veientium refugientes in urbem multi ante portas caesi, dum prae metu, ne simul Romanus inrumperet, obiectis foribus extremos suorum exclusere.

A.U.C.
356

XIV. Haec eo anno acta. Et iam comitia tribu-norum militum aderant, quorum prope maior patribus quam belli cura erat, quippe non communicatum modo cum plebe sed prope amissum cernentibus
2 summum imperium. Itaque clarissimis viris ex com-posito praeparatis ad petendum quos praetereundi verecundiam crederent fore, nihilo minus ipsi, perinde ac si omnes candidati essent, cuncta ex-perientes non homines modo sed deos etiam excie-bant,¹ in religionem vertentes comitia biennio 3 habita: priore anno intolerandam hiemem prodigiisque divinis similem coortam, proximo non prodigia, 4 sed iam eventus: pestilentiam agris urbique inlatam haud dubia ira deum, quos pestis eius arcendae causa placandos esse in libris fatalibus inventum sit;
comitiis auspicato quae fierent indignum dis visum honores vulgari discriminaque gentium confundi.
5 Praeterquam maiestate petentium, religione etiam attoniti homines patricos omnes, partem magnam honoratissimum quemque, tribunos militum consulari potestate creavere, L. Valerium Potitum quintum
M.² Valerium Maximum M. Furium Camillum iterum

¹ exciebant Drakenborch: excipiebant (-bat F) Ω.

² quintum M. D?: quintum (or q̃) Ω: q. (i. e. que) LA?

Veientes likewise, many, as they fled back to the town, were slain before the gates, when their friends, fearing lest the Romans should burst in along with them, had closed the portals, and barred out the hindmost of their own people. B.C. 399

XIV. Such were the events of this year. And now the time drew near for choosing military tribunes and the Fathers were almost more concerned about the election than about the war, perceiving that the highest authority had been not merely shared with the plebs, but well-nigh lost to themselves. They therefore arranged that their most distinguished members should stand,—men whom they believed the electors would be ashamed to pass over,—and at the same time they themselves, as if they had all been candidates, left no stone unturned, and called to their aid not only men, but the gods as well, by raising a religious scruple anent the election held two years before. In the year before the last, they said, there had been an intolerable winter, like a warning from Heaven. Last year had come not prodigies but actual realities: a pestilence had descended upon the fields and the City, clearly proceeding from the anger of the gods, whom they must propitiate in order to avert the plague, as the fateful Books had indicated; it had seemed to the gods an affront that an election held under their auspices should prostitute honours and confound family distinctions. The people were awed not only by the dignity of the candidates, but by the fear of Heaven, and to be military tribunes with consular powers chose all patricians, and chiefly the most illustrious among them, as follows: Lucius Valerius Potitus (for the fifth time), Marcus Valerius Maximus, B.C. 398

A.U.C.
356

L. Furium Medullinum tertium Q. Servilium Fide-6 natem iterum Q. Sulpicium Camerinum iterum. His tribunis ad Veios nihil admodum memorabile actum 7 est; tota vis in populationibus fuit. Duo summi imperatores, Potitus a Faleriis, Camillus a Capena praedas ingentes egere nulla incolumi relictâ re cui ferro aut igni noceri posset.

XV. Prodigia interim multa nuntiari, quorum pleraque, et quia singuli auctores erant, parum credita spretaque, et quia hostibus Etruscis, per 2 quos ea procurarent, haruspices non erant: in unum omnium curae versae sunt, quod lacus in Albano nemore sine ullis caelestibus aquis causave qua alia
 quae rem miraculo eximeret, in altitudinem insolitam
 3 crevit. Quidnam eo di portenderent prodigio missi
 4 sciscitatum oratores ad Delphicum oraculum. Sed propior interpretis fati oblatus senior quidam Veiens, qui inter cavillantes in stationibus ac custodiis milites Romanos Etruscosque vaticinantis in modum cecinit priusquam ex lacu Albano aqua emissa foret nun-5 quam potiturum Veii Romanum. Quod primo velut temere iactum sperni, agitari deinde sermonibus coeptum est, donec unus ex statione Romana per-contactus proximum oppidanorum iam per longinquitatem belli commercio sermonum facto, quisnam
 is esset qui per ambages de lacu Albano iaceret, 6 postquam audivit haruspicem esse, vir haud intacti

Marcus Furius Camillus (for the second time), Lucius B.C. 398 Furius Medullinus (for the third), Quintus Sulpicius Camerinus (for the second). These tribunes achieved absolutely nothing noteworthy at Veii, but employed all their strength in pillaging. The two chief commanders, Potitus and Camillus,—one at Falerii, the other at Capena,—carried off huge spoils and left nothing untouched that iron or fire could destroy.

XV. Meanwhile many portents were reported, most of which, because they had only one witness each to vouch for them, obtained no credence and were slighted; and, besides, when the Etruscans, whose services they employed to avert evil omens, were at war with them, they had no soothsayers. One thing occasioned universal anxiety, namely that the lake in the Alban Wood, without any rains or other cause to make it less than a miracle, rose to an unwonted height. To inquire what the gods could possibly foretell by that prodigy, envoys were sent to the Delphic oracle. But a nearer interpreter of the fates presented himself, an old man of Veii, who,
 while the Roman and Etruscan soldiers were scoffing
 at one another as they stood guard at the outposts, declared in a prophetic strain that until the water should be drawn off from the Alban Lake the Romans never could take Veii. At first they made light of this as an idle taunt; then they began to talk it over; presently one of the Roman outpost inquired of the townsman nearest him (for owing to the long continuance of the war they had now got into the way of conversing together) who that man was who threw out mysterious hints regarding the Alban Lake. When he heard that he was a soothsayer, being himself not without a touch of

A.U.C.
356

religione animi, causatus de privati portenti procuratione si operae illi esset consulere velle, ad 7 colloquium vatem elicit. Cumque progressi ambo a suis longius essent inermes sine ullo metu, prae-valens iuvenis Romanus senem infirmum in conspectu omnium raptum nequiquam tumultuantibus Etruscis 8 ad suos transtulit. Qui cum perductus ad impera-torem, inde Romam ad senatum missus esset, scisci-tantibus quidnam id esset quod de lacu Albano 9 docuisset, respondit profecto iratos deos Veienti populo illo fuisse die quo sibi eam mentem obiecissent 10 ut excidium patriae fatale proderet. Itaque quae tum cecinerit divino spiritu instinctus, ea se nec ut indicta sint revocare posse et tacendo forsitan quae di immortales volgari velint haud minus quam 11 celanda effando nefas contrahi. Sic¹ igitur libris fatalibus, sic disciplina Etrusca traditum esse, quando² aqua Albana abundasset, tum si eam Romanus rite emisisset victoriam de Veientibus dari;
 antequam id fiat deos moenia Veientium deserturos 12 non esse. Exsequebatur inde quae sollemnis deri-vatio esset. Sed auctorem levem nec satis fidum super tanta re patres rati decrevere legatos sortesque oraculi Pythici expectandas.

A.U.C.
357

XVI. Priusquam a Delphis oratores redirent Albanive prodigii piacula invenirentur, novi tribuni

¹ sic ς : his Ω .

² quando Duker: ut quando Ω : ut $\overline{q}\overline{n}$ A.

¹ A tunnel to drain the flood-waters of the Alban Lake, 1300 yards long and from seven to ten feet high, was actually cut through the solid rock, not to bring about the capture of Veii, but to save a few hundred acres of arable land on the sloping edge within the crater (Tenney Frank, Economic History of Rome, p. 7).

superstition, he alleged a desire to consult him B.C. 398
 about the averting of a domestic portent, if he could spare the time, and so enticed the seer to a conference. And when they had walked a little way apart from the friends of both, unarmed and fearing nothing, the stalwart young Roman laid hold of the feeble old man in the sight of them all, and despite an unavailing hubbub raised by the Etruscans, bore him off to his own fellows. There they had him before the general, who sent him on to Rome, to the senate. When the Fathers questioned him what it was he had meant about the Alban Lake, he answered that the gods must surely have been incensed at the people of Veii on the day when they put it into his mind to reveal the destruction destined to befall his native city; and so what he had then uttered under divine inspiration, he could not now unsay and recall; and perhaps in concealing what the immortal gods wished to be published guilt was incurred no less than by disclosing what should be hid. Thus then it was written in the books of fate, thus handed down in the lore of the Etruscans, that when the Alban water should overflow, if then the Romans should duly draw it off, they would be given the victory over the Veientes; until that should come to pass, the gods would not abandon the walls of Veii. He then went on to explain the appointed method of draining it. But the senators, making slight account of his authority, as not sufficiently trustworthy in so grave a matter, determined to wait for their deputies with the response of the Pythian oracle.¹

XVI. But before these envoys could return from B.C. 397
 Delphi or an expiation be devised for the Alban

militum consulari potestate L. Iulius Iulus¹ L. Furius² Medullinus quartum L. Sergius Fidenas A. Postumius Regillensis³ P. Cornelius Maluginensis
 2 A Manlius magistratum inierunt. Eo anno Tarquinienses novi hostes exorti. Qui quia⁴ multis simul bellis, Volscorum ad Anxur, ubi praesidium obsidebatur, Aequorum ad Labicos,⁵ qui Romanam ibi coloniam oppugnabant, ad hoc Veientique et Falisco et Capenati bello occupatos videbant Romanos, nec intra muros quietiora negotia esse
 3 certaminibus patrum ac plebis, inter haec locum iniuriae rati esse praedatum in agrum Romanum cohortes expeditas mittunt: aut enim passuros inultam eam iniuriam Romanos, ne novo bello se onerarent, aut exiguo eoque parum valido exercitu
 4 persecuturos. Romanis indignitas maior quam cura populationis Tarquiniensium fuit; eo nec magno
 5 conatu suscepta nec in longum dilata res est. A. Postumius⁶ et L. Iulius non iusto dilectu—etenim ab tribunis plebis impediabantur—sed prope voluntariorum quos adhortando incitaverant coacta manu per agrum Caeretem obliquis tramitibus egressi redeuntes a populationibus gravesque praeda Tarquinienses oppressere. Multos mortales obtruncant,
 6 omnes exuunt impedimentis, et receptis agrorum

¹ Iulus Sigonius: tullus HDLA: utullus PFBOE: uitullus U: silius tullus *MA*².

² L. Furius ζ: ῑ furius Ω: ῑ silius furius PFUB: praesilius (pre- O) furius OE.

³ Regillensis Sigon.: regiliensis MOE: religiensis Ω.

⁴ Qui quia Duker: quia Ω.

⁵ Labicos Ω at II. xxxix. 4: laucos Ω.

⁶ A. Postumius ζ: aurelius postumius Ω.

¹ For the second time (cf. chap. x. § 1).

² For the third time (cf. chap. viii. § 1).

portent, new military tribunes with consular authority B.C. 397 came in; these were Lucius Julius Iulus,¹ Lucius Furius Medullinus (for the fourth time), Lucius Sergius Fidenas, Aulus Postumius Regillensis, Publius Cornelius Maluginensis, and Aulus Manlius.² In that year a new enemy arose in the Tarquinienses, who seeing the Romans beset with many wars at once,—against the Volsci, who were laying siege to the garrison at Anxur, against the Aequi, who were attacking the Roman colony at Labici, and also against the men of Veii, of Falerii, and of Capena,—and perceiving that affairs within the City were no less troubled, owing to contentions betwixt the patricians and the plebs, believed that in these circumstances they had an opportunity to do the Romans a hurt, and sent out light-armed detachments to raid their territory; for they thought that either the Romans would put up with the wrong, to avoid the burden of another war, or would take the field with a small and therefore inadequate army. The indignation of the Romans was greater than their concern for the damage wrought by the Tarquinienses; so they neither made strenuous efforts to prepare, nor deferred taking action to a distant date. Aulus Postumius and Lucius Iulus, without holding a regular levy—for this the plebeian tribunes hindered—but with a company consisting almost solely of volunteers whom they had induced to join by their exhortations, marched out by cross-country ways through the territory of Caere, and surprised the Tarquinienses as they were returning from their depredations laden with booty. Many men they slew, all they stripped of their baggage; and having recovered the spoils of their own fields,

A.U.C.
357

- 7 suorum spoliis Romani revertuntur. Biduum ad recognoscendas res datum dominis; tertio incognita—erant autem ea pleraque hostium ipsorum—sub hasta veniere, quodque inde redactum militibus est divisum.
- 8 Cetera bella maximeque Veiens incerti exitus erant. Iamque Romani desperata ope humana fata et deos spectabant, cum legati ab Delphis venerunt sortem oraculi adferentes congruentem responso
- 9 captivi vatis: “Romane, aquam Albanam cave lacu contineri, cave in mare manare suo flumine sinas; emissam per agros rigabis dissipatamque rivis exstin-
- 10 gues; tum tu insiste audax hostium muris, memor quam per tot annos obsides urbem ex ea tibi his
- 11 quae nunc panduntur fatis victoriam datam. Bello perfecto donum amplum victor ad inea templa portato, sacraque patria, quorum omissa cura est, instaurata ut adsolet facito.”

XVII. Ingens inde haberi captivus vates coeptus, eumque adhibere tribuni militum Cornelius Postumiusque ad prodigii Albani procurationem ac deos

2 rite placandos coepere; inventumque tandem est ubi neglectas caerimonias intermissumve sollemne di arguerent: nihil profecto aliud esse quam magistratus vitio creatos Latinas sacrumque in Albano

3 monte non rite concepisse; unam expiationem eorum

¹ i. e. at public auction, the spear being set up to advertise such a sale.

returned to Rome. Two days were allowed the owners to identify their property; on the third all that had not been recognized—chiefly things belonging to the enemy themselves—was sold under the spear¹ and the proceeds divided amongst the soldiers. B.C. 397

The other campaigns, especially the one at Veii, were indecisive. And now the Romans, despairing of human aid, were looking to destiny and the gods, when the deputies returned from Delphi, bringing the oracle's response, which corresponded with the utterance of the captive seer: "Roman, see that thou suffer not the Alban water to be confined within the lake, nor to fret its own channel to the sea; thou shalt draw it forth and water the fields withal, and spread it abroad till it be lost in rivulets; after that press boldly on against the walls of the foe, and know that over that city which thou dost beleaguer for so many years, the fates now disclosed have given thee the victory. When thou hast ended the war with conquest, bring to my temple an ample gift, and repeat and accomplish in customary wise the ancestral rites thou hast neglected."

XVII. The captive soothsayer began from that moment to be held in great repute, and the military tribunes, Cornelius and Postumius, set out to employ him about the expiation of the Alban prodigy and the due appeasement of the gods. At length it was discovered wherein the gods taxed them with neglecting ceremonies or omitting a festival: it was assuredly nothing else than that magistrates in whose election there had been a flaw had improperly proclaimed the Latin games and the sacrifice on the

A.U.C.
357

- esse ut tribuni militum abdicarent se magistratu, auspicia de integro repeterentur, et interregnum
 4 iniretur. Ea ita facta sunt ex senatus consulto. Interreges tres deinceps fuere, L. Valerius Q.
 5 Servilius Fidenas M. Furius Camillus. Nunquam desitum interim turbari, comitia interpellantibus tribunis plebis donec convenisset prius ut maior pars tribunorum militum ex plebe crearetur.
 6 Quae dum aguntur, concilia Etruriae ad fanum Voltumnae habita, postulantibusque Capenatibus ac
 7 Faliscis ut Veios communi animo consilioque omnes Etruriae populi ex obsidione eriperent, responsum est antea se id Veientibus negasse quia unde consilium non petissent super tanta re auxilium petere
 8 non deberent; nunc iam pro se fortunam suam illis negare. Maxima iam in parte¹ Etruriae gentem invisitatam,² novos accolas esse,³ cum quibus nec pax
 9 satis fida nec bellum pro certo sit. Sanguini tamen nominique et praesentibus periculis consanguineorum id dari ut si qui iuventutis suae voluntate ad id
 10 bellum eant non impedian. Eum magnum advenisse hostium numerum fama Romae erat; eoque mitescere discordiae intestinae metu communi, ut fit, coepere.⁴

¹ maxima iam in parte Luterbacher: maxime in ea parte Ω .

² invisitatam E¹D²: inuisitatem (or inusitatam or inuisitatam) Ω .

³ esse Conway and Walters: Gallos esse Ω .

⁴ coepere Weissenborn: coeptae Ω .

¹ The Latin Festival (in honour of Jupiter Latiaris, who presided over the Latin League) was held each year, and was followed by a sacrifice, on the date proclaimed by the new consuls, or consular tribunes.

Alban Mount¹; only one atonement for these errors B.C. 397 was open to them, to make the tribunes of the soldiers resign their office, to take the auspices afresh, and to begin an interregnum. By decree of the senate these things were done. There were three successive interreges, Lucius Valerius, Quintus Servilius Fidenas, Marcus Furius Camillus. In the meantime there were continuous disturbances, and the plebeian tribunes blocked the election, until it had first been agreed that the majority of the military tribunes should be chosen out of the commons.

While this was going on, the Etruscans met in council at the Fane of Voltumna; where the Capenates and Faliscans proposed that all the nations of Etruria should unite in a common resolution and design to raise the siege of Veii. The council made answer that they had before refused the Veientes this request, on the ground that they had no right to ask help from those whom they had not cared to look to for advice in so weighty a matter. Just then, however, the plight of their country itself denied the petition. There was now in the greatest part of Etruria a strange race, new settlers, with whom they were neither securely at peace nor yet certain to have war. Nevertheless, out of regard for the blood and the name and the present perils of their kinsmen, they would grant that if any of their young men wished to serve in that war, they might do so without let or hindrance. Of such recruits it was said at Rome that a great number had come in; and so domestic differences began to subside, as generally happens, in the face of a common danger.

- XVIII. Haud invitis patribus P. Licinium Calvum praerogativae¹ tribunum militum non petentem creant, moderationis expertae in priore magistratu virum, ceterum iam tum exactae aetatis; omnesque
 2 deinceps ex collegio eiusdem anni refici apparebat, L. Titinium P. Maenium² Cn. Genucium L. Atilium. Qui priusquam renunciarentur iure vocatis tribubus, permissu interregis P. Licinius Calvus ita verba
 3 fecit: "Omen concordiae, Quirites, rei maxime in hoc tempus utili, memoria nostri magistratus vos his 4 comitiis petere in insequentem annum video; sed collegas³ eosdem reficitis, etiam usu meliores factos, me iam non eundem sed umbram nomenque P. Licini relictum videtis. Vires corporis adfectae, sensus oculorum atque aurium hebetes, memoria
 5 labat, vigor animi obtusus. En vobis" inquit "iuvenem," filium tenens, "effigiem atque imaginem eius quem vos antea tribunum militum ex plebe primum fecistis. Hunc ego institutum disciplina mea vicarium pro me rei publicae do dicoque vosque quaeso, Quirites, delatum mihi ultro honorem huic petenti meisque pro eo adiectis precibus mandetis."
 6 Datum id petenti patri, filiusque eius P. Licinius tribunus militum consulari potestate cum iis quos
 7 supra scripsimus declaratus. Titinius Genuciusque

¹ praerogativae Sigonius: praerogatiua (progiatiua P) Ω.

² P. Maenium Ω: P. Maenium Q. Manlium Niebuhr: Q. Manlium P. Maenium Madvig (cf. v. xii. 10, and C.I.L. i,² p. 118).

³ sed collegas Madvig: sit (or et sit or et si or et ii or si et or sic) collegas Ω.

¹ The praerogatives were the eighteen centuries of knights, which voted first; if they agreed, the other centuries were not called. See i. xliii. 11.

BOOK V. XVIII. 1-7

XVIII. It occasioned the Fathers no displeasure B.C. 396 when the prerogative centuries¹ chose Publius Licinius Calvus tribune of the soldiers, without his seeking office; he was a man whose moderation had been proven in his former term, but was now become superannuated. It was clear that all who had been his colleagues in that same year would also be returned, one after the other, to wit: Lucius Titinius, Publius Maenius, Gnaeus Genucius, Lucius Atilius. But before they were declared to the duly assembled tribes, Licinius spoke as follows, having obtained permission of the interrex: "It is an omen of harmony, as I perceive, Quirites, a thing most needful at this juncture, that you seek for the ensuing year, when in your voting you remember our former magistracy; but whereas in my colleagues you are choosing again the same men, and all the better for experience, in me you see no longer the same Publius Licinius, of whom but the shadow and the name are left. My strength of body is decayed, my sight and hearing dulled, memory fails me, and the vigour of my mind is impaired. Here," he cried, laying hold of his son, "here is a young man, the effigy and likeness of him you formerly chose for military tribune first of all plebeians. Him have I bred up in my own principles, and in my stead I give and dedicate him to the state, and I pray you, Quirites, who without my seeking have offered me the office, that you grant it to him, who seeks it, and to the prayers I have added in his behalf." The father was granted his request, and the son, Publius Licinius, was declared military tribune with consular powers, together with those I have named above. Titinius and Genucius, tribunes of the soldiers, tribuni militum profecti adversus Faliscos Capenatesque, dum bellum maiore animo gerunt quam consilio, 8 praecipitavere se in insidias. Genucius morte honesta temeritatem luens ante signa inter primores cecidit; Titinius in editum tumulum ex multa trepidatione

militibus collectis aciem restituit, nec se tamen aequo 9 loco hosti commisit. Plus ignominiae erat quam cladis acceptum, quae prope in cladem ingentem vertit; tantum inde terroris non Romae modo, quo
multiplex fama pervenerat, sed in castris quoque 10 fuit ad Veios. Aegre ibi miles retentus a fuga est cum pervasisset castra rumor ducibus exercituque caeso victorem Capenatem ac Faliscum Etruriaeque 11 omnem iuventutem haud procul inde abesse. His tumultuosiora Romae, iam castra ad Veios oppugnari, iam partem hostium tendere ad urbem agmine in-festo, crediderant; concursumque in muros est et matronarum, quas ex domo conciverat publicus pavor, obsecrationes in templis factae, precibusque ab dis 12 petitum, ut exitium ab urbis tectis templisque ac moenibus Romanis arcerent Veiosque eum averterent terrorem, si sacra renovata rite, si procurata prodigia essent.

XIX. Iam ludi Latinaeque instaurata erant, iam
ex lacu Albano aqua emissa in agros, Veiosque fata
2 adpetebant. Igitur fatalis dux ad excidium illius having marched against the Faliscans and Capenates, B.C. 396 brought more spirit than generalship to their conduct of the war, and plunged into an ambush. Genucius, atoning for his rashness by an honourable death, fell fighting among the foremost, in front of the standards; Titinius rallied his men, who had been thrown into great confusion, on a little eminence, and made a stand, yet he would not risk an engagement on level ground. The disgrace outweighed the defeat, which had almost proved disastrous, so great was the panic which it caused, not only in Rome, where a greatly exaggerated report of the affair had been received, but also in the camp before Veii. There the soldiers could hardly be restrained from flight, for a rumour had run through the camp that the victorious Capenates and Faliscans, having slaughtered the Roman commanders and their army, were close at hand, with all the manhood of Etruria. Accounts even more alarming had been credited at Rome: that the camp at Veii was already under attack; that already a division of the enemy was marching to assail the City. There was a rush to the walls, and the women, drawn from their houses by the general consternation, betook themselves to prayer in the temples, and besought the gods to ward off destruction from the houses and shrines of the City and from the walls of Rome, and to turn that panic against Veii, if the sacred rites had been duly renewed and the portents expiated.

XIX. And now the games and the Latin Festival had been repeated, now the water had been let out from the Alban Lake upon the fields, and the doom of Veii drew on apace. Accordingly the commander destined to destroy that city and to save his country,

A.U.C.
358

- urbis servandaeque patriae, M. Furius Camillus, dictator dictus magistrum equitum P. Cornelium
- 3 Scipionem dixit. Omnia repente mutaverat imperator mutatus; alia spes, alius animus hominum, fortuna
- 4 quoque alia urbis videri. Omnium primum in eos qui a Veiiis in illo pavore fugerant more militari animadvertit, effecitque ne hostis maxime timendus militi esset. Deinde indicto dilectu in diem certam ipse interim Veios ad confirmandos militum animos
- 5 intercurrit; inde Romam ad scribendum novum exercitum redit nullo detractante militiam. Peregrina etiam iuventus, Latini Hernicique, operam
- 6 suam pollicentes ad id bellum venere; quibus cum gratias in senatu egisset dictator, satis iam omnibus ad id bellum paratis ludos magnos ex senatus consulto vovit Veiiis captis se facturum aedemque Matutae Matris refectionem dedicaturum, iam ante ab rege
- 7 Ser. Tullio dedicatam. Profectus cum exercitu ab urbe exspectatione hominum maiore quam spe in agro primum Nepesino cum Faliscis et Capenatibus
- 8 signa confert. Omnia ibi summa ratione consilioque acta fortuna etiam, ut fit, secuta est. Non proelio tantum fudit hostes, sed castris quoque exiit ingentique praeda est potitus; cuius pars maxima ad quaestorem redacta est, haud ita multum militi datum.
- 9 Inde ad Veios exercitus ductus, densioraque castella

¹ Livy's brevity here makes the sentence a little obscure. No doubt the Latins and Hernicans first sent envoys, and these were introduced into the senate and there thanked by the dictator.

² i.e. votive games in recognition of some special favour of the gods.

Marcus Furius Camillus, was appointed dictator, and named Publius Cornelius Scipio as his master of the horse. The change in the command at once made a change in all things else; there was new hope and a new spirit, and even the fortune of the City seemed to be renewed. The dictator's first act was to visit military punishment upon those who had fled from Veii in the panic there, and to teach his men that the enemy was not the worst thing they had to fear. He then fixed the levy for a certain day, and in the interval hastened to Veii to encourage his soldiers; thence he returned to Rome to enroll the new army, and found no one who refused to serve. Even foreign troops, Latins and Hernicans, came with promises to help in this war, and the dictator thanked them in the senate.¹ All things being now in readiness for the campaign, Camillus vowed, in pursuance of a senatorial decree, to celebrate the Great Games,² if he should capture Veii, and to restore and dedicate anew the temple of Mater Matuta, which in time gone by had been consecrated by King Servius Tullius. Marching out from the City, where he left a greater feeling of suspense than of confidence, he first engaged the Faliscans and Capenates, in the Nepesine country. There all his measures, being executed with consummate skill and prudence, were attended, as generally happens, with good fortune. Not only did he rout the enemy in battle, but he also deprived them of their camp and got possession of enormous booty, the chief part of which was made over to the quaestor, and no great quantity given to the soldiers. He then led his army to Veii, where he increased the number of redoubts, and withdrawing the troops from the facta et a procursationibus, quae multae temere inter

A.U.C.
358

 murum ac vallum fiebant, edicto ne quis iniussu 10 pugnaret, ad opus milites traducti. Operum fuit omnium longe maximum ac laboriosissimum cuniculus in arcem hostium agi coeptus. Quod ne intermit-11 teretur opus neu sub terra continuus labor eosdem conficeret, in partes sex munitorum numerum divisit;
 senae horae in orbem operi attributae sunt; nocte
 ac die nunquam ante omissum quam in arcem viam facerent.

XX. Dictator cum iam in manibus videret victoriam esse, urbem opulentissimam capi, tantumque praedae fore quantum non omnibus in unum conlatis ante 2 bellis fuisset, ne quam inde aut militum iram ex malignitate praedae partitae aut invidiam apud patres
 ex prodiga largitione caperet, litteras ad senatum 3 misit, deum immortalium benignitate suis consiliis patientia militum Veios iam fore in potestate populi 4 Romani; quid de praeda faciendum censerent? Duae senatum distinebant sententiae, senis P. Licini, quem primum dixisse a filio interrogatum ferunt,
 edici palam placere populo ut qui particeps esse 5 praedae vellet in castra Veios iret, altera Ap. Claudii, qui largitionem novam prodigam inaequalem incon-

¹ Livy is perhaps following Licinius Macer (Introd. p. xxix), in recording the very irregular procedure by which the tribune passed over the patrician senators to honour his plebeian father.

² The booty was regularly sold and the proceeds placed in the treasury.

skirmishes which frequently took place, on the spur B.C. 396
of the moment, in the space between the town wall and the stockade, by an edict forbidding any man to fight without orders, he employed them in digging.
Of all the works, much the greatest and most laborious was a mine they began to drive into the enemy's citadel. That this work might not be interrupted nor the same men become exhausted by perpetually toiling under ground, he divided the workers into six parties and assigned them six-hour shifts in rotation; night and day the work went on unceasingly, till they had made a way into the citadel.

XX. The dictator saw that victory was at last within his grasp, and that a city of great wealth was on the point of being taken, with booty more than if all previous wars had been put together. Lest, therefore, he might incur either the resentment of the soldiers, in consequence of a niggardly division of the spoils, or the ill-will of the Fathers, if he were lavish in sharing them out, he wrote to the senate, that thanks to the favour of the immortal gods, his own direction, and the patient efforts of his troops, Veii would presently be in the power of the Roman People, and asked what disposition they proposed making of the plunder. The senate was divided between two opinions; the aged Publius Licinius, who was the first, they say, that his son called upon to speak,¹ advised making public proclamation that the people decreed that whoso desired a share in the spoils should proceed to the camp at Veii;
the other plan was that of Appius Claudius, who declared that such largess was without example,² reckless, unfair, and ill-advised; if they were per-

- sultam arguens, si semel nefas ducerent captam ex hostibus in aerario exhausto bellis pecuniam esse, auctor erat stipendii ex ea pecunia militi numerandi 6 ut eo minus tributi plebes conferret; eius enim doni societatem sensuras aequaliter omnium domos, non avidas in direptiones manus otiosorum urbanorum praerepturas fortium bellatorum praemia esse, cum ita ferme eveniat ut segnior sit praedator, ut quisque laboris periculique praecipuam petere partem soleat.
 7 Licinius contra suspectam et invisam semper eam pecuniam fore aiebat causasque criminum ad plebem, seditionum inde ac legum novarum praebituram;
 8 satius igitur esse reconciliari eo dono plebis animos, exhaustis atque exinanitis tributo tot annorum succurri, et sentire praedae fructum ex eo bello in quo prope consenuerint. Gratus id fore laetiusque quod quisque sua manu ex hoste captum domum rettulerit quam si multiplex alterius arbitrio accipiat.
 9 Ipsum dictatorem fugere invidiam ex eo criminaque; eo delegasse ad senatum; senatum quoque debere reiectam rem ad se permittere plebi ac pati habere
 10 quod cuique fors belli dederit. Haec tutior visa sententia est quae popularem senatum faceret. Edictum itaque est ad praedam Veientem quibus videretur in castra ad dictatorem proficiscerentur.

¹ The patricians also paid the tax; but it bore harder upon the plebeians, owing to their poverty.

suaded once for all that it was wicked that money B.C. 396 captured from the enemy should lie in the treasury, which had been exhausted by the wars, he urged them to pay the soldiers out of it, that the plebs might have so much the less war-tax to contribute¹; this was a boon of which all families alike would feel the benefit, nor would the hands of idle city-folk, greedy of pillage, pluck away the rewards of valiant fighting men—since it commonly turned out that in proportion as a man was prone to seek a leading share of toil and danger, he was slow in plundering. Licinius argued, on the other hand, that this money would breed endless suspicion and hate, and would furnish grounds for accusations before the plebs, and so for agitation and revolutionary laws; it was better, therefore, to win over by this gift the sympathies of the commons, to succour them, exhausted and impoverished as they were by so many years' taxation, and to let them enjoy the spoils and fruits of that war in which they had well-nigh grown old men; there would in every instance be more satisfaction and pleasure in what a man took with his own hand from the enemy and brought home, than if he received many times its value at the discretion of another; the dictator himself would fain avoid the enmity and charges arising from this business, and therefore had handed it over to the senate; the senate, likewise, in its turn, should refer the question to the plebs, and let every man keep what the fortune of war might give him. This policy seemed the safer, since it would make the senate popular. Accordingly, proclamation was made that all who liked might go to the dictator in camp, to share in the plunder of Veii.

XXI. Ingens profecta multitudo replevit castra. Tum dictator auspicato egressus cum edixisset ut
 2 arma milites caperent, "Tuo ductu" inquit, "Pythice Apollo, tuoque numine instinctus pergo ad delendam urbem Veios tibi-
 3 voveo. Te simul, Iuno regina, quae nunc Veios colis, precor, ut nos victores in nostram tuamque
 4 dine tua templum accipiat." Haec precatus superante multitudine ab omnibus locis urbem adgreditur, quo
 5 Veientes ignari se iam a suis vatibus, iam ab externis oraculis proditos, iam in partem praedae suae vocatos deos, alios votis ex urbe sua evocatos hostium templa
 6 agere, nihil minus timentes quam subrutis cuniculo moenibus arcem iam plenam hostium esse, in muros
 7 pro se quisque armati discurrunt, mirantes quidnam id esset quod, cum tot per dies nemo se ab stationibus Romanus movisset, tum velut repentino icti
 8 Insertur huic loco fabula: immolante rege Veientium vocem haruspiciis, dicentis qui eius hostiae exta prosecuisset ei victoriam dari, exauditam in cuniculo

¹ The Latin word is a technical term which is used of carving up, in a specified way, the entrails (proscindere) which were to be burnt on the altar.

XXI. A vast throng went out, and filled the camp. B.C. 396
 Then the dictator, after taking the auspices, came forth and commanded the troops to arm. "Under thy leadership," he cried, "Pythian Apollo, and inspired by thy will, I advance to destroy the city of Veii, and to thee I promise a tithe of its spoils. At the same time I beseech thee, Queen Juno, that dwellest now in Veii, to come with us, when we have gotten the victory, to our City—soon to be thine, too—that a temple meet for thy majesty may there receive thee." These prayers uttered, he set forward with overwhelming numbers to assault the town on every side, that the inhabitants might not perceive the danger pressing upon them from the mine. The Veientes, unconscious that they were already given up by their own soothsayers, and by foreign oracles, that some of the gods had already been invited to share in their despoiling, while others having been entreated to quit their city were beginning to look to new homes in the temples of their enemies, and that this was the last day they were themselves to live, feared nothing less than that their defences were undermined and their citadel already filled with foemen, and, each for himself, took up arms and ran out to the ramparts; marvelling what it meant that whereas for so many days not a Roman had stirred from his post, they should now, as though they had suddenly gone mad, be rushing blindly against the walls.

At this point men introduce a tale, how, as the King of the Veientes was sacrificing, the Roman soldiers in the mine overheard the soothsayer declare that to him who should cut up¹ the inwards of that victim would be given the victory, and were

- movisse Romanos milites ut adaperto cuniculo exta 9 raperent et ad dictatorem ferrent. Sed in rebus tam antiquis si quae similia veri sint pro veris acci-piantur, satis habeam : haec ad ostentationem scaenae gaudentis miraculis aptiora quam ad fidem neque adfirmare neque refellere est operae pretium.
- 10 Cuniculus delectis militibus eo tempore plenus
 in aedem¹ Iunonis, quae in Veientana arce erat, armatos repente edidit, et pars aversos in muris
 invadunt hostes, pars claustra portarum revellunt, pars cum ex tectis saxa tegulaeque a mulieribus ac 11 servitiis iacerentur, inferunt ignes. Clamor omnia variis terrentium ac paventium vocibus mixto mulie-12 rum ac puerorum ploratu complet. Momento temporis deiectis ex muro undique armatis patefactisque portis cum alii agmine intruerent, alii desertos scan-derent muros, urbs hostibus impletur ; omnibus locis 13 pugnatur ; deinde multa iam edita caede senescit
 pugna, et dictator praecones edicere iubet ut ab 14 inermi abstinenceatur. Is finis sanguinis fuit. Dedi inde inermes coepti, et ad praedam miles permissu dictatoris discurrit. Quae cum ante oculos eius aliquantum spe atque opinione maior maiorisque pretii rerum ferretur, dicitur manus ad caelum tollens 15 precatus esse ut si cui deorum hominumque nimia
 sua fortuna populique Romani videretur, ut eam

¹ in aedem ζ : in aede Ω

¹ With this sentence compare Livy's Preface, § 6.

BOOK V. XXI. 8-15

moved to open the mine and seize the entrails, B.C. 396 which they bore off to the dictator. But in matters of so great antiquity I should be content if things probable were to be received as true: this story, more fit to be displayed on the stage, that delights in wonders, than to be believed, it is worth while neither to affirm nor to refute.¹

The mine, which was then filled with picked troops, suddenly discharged its armed men into the temple of Juno, on the Veientine citadel; some of them assailed the backs of their enemies, who were on the walls; others wrenched off the bars that made fast the gates; others, when the women and slaves cast down stones and tiles from roofs, fetched fire against them. The air resounded with shouts; and fearful yells and shrieks of despair were blended with the wailing of women and children. In a moment the armed soldiers were everywhere hurled from the walls, and the gates thrown open. A part of the Romans poured through them in a body, others scaled the deserted walls; the city was overrun with enemies; the battle raged in every quarter; then, when there had already been great carnage, the fighting began to flag, and the dictator bade the heralds proclaim that those without arms should be spared. This ended the slaughter. The unarmed began to give themselves up, and the Romans scattered, with the dictator's permission, in quest of booty. When this was brought before him, and he saw that it was considerably larger and comprised effects of greater value than he had hoped or thought, it is said that he raised his hands to heaven and prayed that if any god or man deemed his good fortune and that of the Roman People to be excessive, it might be granted

invidiam lenire quam minimo suo privato incommodo 16 publicoque populi Romani liceret. Convertentem se inter hanc venerationem traditur memoriae pro-lapsum cecidisse; idque omen pertinuisse postea eventu rem coniectantibus visum ad damnationem ipsius Camilli, captae deinde urbis Romanae, quod 17 post paucos accidit annos, cladem. Atque ille dies caede hostium ac direptione urbis opulentissimae est consumptus.

XXII. Postero die libera corpora dictator sub corona vendidit. Ea sola pecunia in publicum redigitur, haud sine ira plebis; et quod rettulere secum praedae, nec duci, qui ad senatum, malignitatis auc-2 tores quaerendo, rem arbitrii sui reiecisset, nec senatui, sed Liciniae familiae, ex qua filius ad
 senatum rettulisset, pater tam popularis sententiae
 3 auctor fuisset, acceptum referebant. Cum iam humanae opes egestae a Veiis essent, amoliri tum deum
 dona ipsosque deos, sed colentium magis quam 4 rapientium modo, coepere. Namque delecti ex omni exercitu iuvenes pure lautis corporibus, candida veste, quibus deportanda Romam regina Iuno adsignata erat, venerabundi templum iniere primo religiose
 5 admoventes manus, quod id signum more Etrusco
 nisi certae gentis sacerdos attractare non esset

¹ Literally, "under the chaplet," alluding to the garlands worn by captives when they were put up for sale (Aulus Gellius, VI. iv.).

him to appease that envy with the least harm to his own private interests and to the public welfare of the Roman People. As he turned, while making this prayer, tradition states that he slipped and fell, and that this omen was seen (when men came later to gather its meaning from the event) to point to the condemnation of Camillus himself, and in the second place, to the capture of Rome, a disaster which befell a few years afterwards. So that day was spent in the slaughter of enemies and the sack of a most opulent city. B.C. 396

XXII. On the following day the dictator sold the free-born inhabitants into slavery.¹ This was the only money that went into the state treasury, but the commons were angry about it; as for the booty they brought back themselves, they gave the credit not to their commander, who had referred to the Fathers, that they might support his niggardliness, a matter which had lain within his own discretion, nor yet to the senators, but to the house of the Licinii, whose son had brought to a vote in the senate that popular measure which his father had proposed. When the wealth that belonged to men had now been carried away out of Veii, they began to remove the possessions of the gods and the gods themselves, but more in the manner of worshippers than of pillagers. For out of all the army youths were chosen, and made to cleanse their bodies and to put on white garments, and to them the duty was assigned of conveying Queen Juno to Rome. Reverently entering her temple, they scrupled at first to approach her with their hands, because this image was one that according to Etruscan practice none but a priest of a certain family was wont to solitus. Dein cum quidam seu spiritu divino tactus seu iuvenali ioco, "Visne Romam ire, Iuno?" dixis-6 set, adnuisse ceteri deam conclamaverunt. Inde fabulae adiectum est vocem quoque dicentis velle

auditam; motam certe sede sua parvi molimenti adminiculis sequentis modo accepimus levem ac
facilem tralatu fuisse, integramque in Aventinum, 7 aeternam sedem suam quo vota Romani dictatoris vocaverant, perlatam, ubi templum ei postea idem qui voverat Camillus dedicavit.

8 Hic Veiorum occasus fuit, urbis opulentissimae Etrusci nominis, magnitudinem suam vel ultima clade indicantis, quod decem aestates hiemesque continuas circumssessa cum plus aliquanto cladium intulisset quam accepisset, postremo iam fato quoque urgente, operibus tamen, non vi expugnata est.

XXIII. Romam ut nuntiatum est Veios captos, quamquam et prodigia procurata fuerant et vatum responsa et Pythicae sortes notae, et quantum
humanis adiuvari consiliis potuerat res duces M.
Furium maximum imperatorum omnium legerant,
2 tamen, quia tot annis varie ibi bellatum erat multae-que clades acceptae, velut ex insperato immensum 3 gaudium fuit, et priusquam senatus decerneret plena omnia templa Romanarum matrum grates dis agen-touch ; when one of them, whether divinely inspired B.C. 396

 or out of youthful jocularly, asked, " Wilt thou go, Juno, to Rome ? "—whereat the others all cried out that the goddess had nodded assent. It was afterwards added to the story that she had also been heard to say that she was willing. At all events we are told that she was moved from her place with contrivances of little power, as though she accompanied them voluntarily, and was lightly and easily transferred and carried safe and sound to the Aventine, the eternal home to which the prayers of the Roman dictator had called her ; and there Camillus afterwards dedicated to her the temple which he himself had vowed.

Such was the fall of Veii, the wealthiest city of the Etruscan race, which gave evidence of its greatness even in its final overthrow ; since after a blockade of ten continuous summers and winters, during which time it had inflicted considerably heavier losses than it had sustained, it yet was ultimately taken, when at last even destiny fought against it, by siege-works and not by force.

XXIII. When word came to Rome that Veii was taken, although the portents had been averted and the answers of the soothsayers and the Pythian oracle were known ; and though they had done all that human wisdom could do to help, in choosing Marcus Furius Camillus, greatest of all generals, to lead them ; nevertheless, because they had warred there so many years with varying fortune and had suffered many a reverse, their joy, as though unexpected, knew no bounds ; and ere the senate could act, the temples were all thronged with Roman matrons giving thanks to the gods. The

- tium erant. Senatus in quadriduum, quot dierum
 4 nullo ante bello, supplicationes decernit. Adventus quoque dictatoris omnibus ordinibus obviam effusis celebratior quam ullius unquam antea fuit, trium-phusque omnem consuetum honorandi diei illius ¹ 5 modum aliquantum excessit. Maxime conspectus ipse est curru equis albis iuncto urbem invectus;
 parumque id non civile modo sed humanum etiam 6 visum. Iovis Solisque equis aequiperatum dictatorem in religionem etiam trahebant, triumphusque ob
 eam unam maxime rem clarior quam gratior fuit.
 7 Tum Iunoni reginae templum in Aventino locavit dedicavitque Matutae Matris; atque his divinis humanisque rebus gestis dictatura se abdicavit.
 8 Agi deinde de Apollinis dono coeptum. Cui se decimam vovisse praedae partem cum diceret
 Camillus, pontifices solvendum religione populum 9 censerent, haud facile inibatur ratio iubendi referre praedam populum, ut ex ea pars debita in sacrum 10 secerneretur. Tandem eo quod lenissimum videbatur decursum est, ut qui se domumque religione exsolvere vellet, cum sibimet ipse praedam aestimasset suam, decimae pretium partis in publicum 11 deferret, ut ex eo donum aureum, dignum amplitudine templi ac numine dei, ex dignitate populi

¹ diei illius *F*³: diem illius (illus H) Ω.

¹ Livy is probably mistaken in ascribing the unpopularity of the triumph to the supposed presumption of Camillus, since it was traditional for the triumphator to suggest a likeness to Jupiter, both in his chariot and in his costume. Resentment over the disposal of the booty is more likely to have been the reason.

² This temple was in the cattle-market, the Forum Boarium.

senate decreed supplications for four days, a longer B.C. 396 period than in any former war. Moreover, as the dictator drew near, all sorts and conditions of men ran forth to meet him in such numbers as had never welcomed a general before, and the triumph far exceeded the measure of honour usual on that day. He was himself the most conspicuous object in it, as he rode into the City on a chariot drawn by white horses; an act which struck men as being not only undemocratic, but irreverent, for they were troubled at the thought that in respect to his steeds the dictator was made equal to Jupiter and the sun-god; and the triumph, chiefly for this one reason, was more brilliant than popular.¹ He then let the contract for the temple of Queen Juno on the Aventine, and dedicated one to Mater Matuta;² and having fulfilled these obligations to gods and men, laid down the dictatorship.

The next thing to be discussed was the gift to Apollo, to whom Camillus said that he had solemnly promised a tenth part of the spoils. The pontiffs ruled that the people must discharge this obligation, but it was not easy to devise a method for compelling them to return the booty, that out of it the due proportion might be set apart for the sacred object. They finally resorted to what seemed the least oppressive plan, namely, that whosoever wished to acquit himself and his household of obligation on the score of the vow, should appraise his own share of the spoils, and pay in a tenth part of its value to the public treasury, to the end that it might be converted into an offering of gold befitting the grandeur of the temple and the power of the god and corresponding to the majesty of the Roman

LIVY

A.U.C.
358

12 Romani fieret. Ea quoque conlatio plebis animos a Camillo alienavit. Inter haec pacificatum legati a Volscis et Aequis venerunt, impetrataque pax, magis ut fessa tam diutino bello adquiesceret civitas quam quod digni peterent.

A.U.C.
359

XXIV. Veiis captis sex tribunos militum consulari potestate insequens annus habuit, duos P. Cornelios, Cossum et Scipionem, M. Valerium Maximum iterum K. Fabium Ambustum tertium¹ L. Furium Medullinum quintum Q. Servilium tertium. Corneliis Faliscum bellum, Valerio ac Servilio Capenas sorte evenit. Ab iis non urbes vi aut operibus temptatae, sed ager est depopulatus praedaeque rerum agrestium actae; nulla felix arbor, nihil frugiferum in agro relictum. Ea clades Capenatem populum subegit; pax petentibus data; in Faliscis bellum restabat.

4 Romae interim multiplex seditio erat, cuius leniendae causa coloniam in Volscos, quo tria milia civium Romanorum scriberentur, deducendam censuerant, triumvirique ad id creati terna iugera et septunces

5 viritim diviserant. Ea largitio sperni coepta, quia spei maioris avertendae solacium obiectum censebant: cur enim relegari plebem in Volscos, cum pulcherrima urbs Veii agerque Veientanus in con-

6 spectu sit, uberior ampliorque Romano agro? Urbem

¹ tertium Sigon. (C.I.L. i², p. 118): iterum (wanting in V) Ω.

¹ See chap. xxii. § 1 and chap. xxiii. § 5.

² The iugerum contained 28,800 square feet, while the English acre contains 43,560.

People. This contribution still further alienated B.C. 396 the affections of the commons from Camillus.¹ In the midst of these affairs came envoys from the Volsci and the Aequi seeking peace, and their suit was granted, more that the state, worn out with so long a war, might be at rest, than because the petitioners deserved it.

XXIV. The year which followed the capture of B.C. 395 Veii had six consular tribunes, to wit, the two Publii Cornelii, Cossus and Scipio, Marcus Valerius Maximus (for the second time), Caeso Fabius Ambustus (for the third), Lucius Furius Medullinus (for the fifth), Quintus Servilius (for the third). To the Cornelii was allotted the Faliscan war, to Valerius and Servilius the war with Capena. They attempted no cities, either by assault or by siege, but wasted the countryside and despoiled the farmers of their possessions, leaving not one fruit-tree in the land nor any productive plant. This devastation overcame the resistance of the Capenates; they begged for peace and it was granted. In the Faliscan country the war went on.

At Rome, meanwhile, there were disturbances of many sorts, to quiet which the senate had voted to plant a colony on the Volscian frontier, and to enroll for that destination three thousand Roman citizens, to each of whom a board of three, appointed for the purpose, had proposed to assign three iugera² and seven-twelfths. This donation men were disposed to spurn, regarding it as a sop intended to divert their hopes from greater things: for why should the plebs be banished to the Volscian country, when the fair city of Veii and the Veientine lands (more fertile and extensive than those of Rome) were there

- quoque urbi Romae vel situ vel magnificentia publicorum privatorumque tectorum ac locorum praeponerant. Quin illa quoque actio movebatur, quae post captam utique Romam a Gallis celebratior fuit, transmigrandi Veios. Ceterum partem plebis, partem senatus destinabant ad habitandos¹ Veios, duasque urbes communi re publica² incoli a populo Romano posse.
- Adversus quae cum optimates ita tenderent ut morituros se citius dicerent in conspectu populi Romani quam quicquam earum rerum rogaretur; quippe nunc in una urbe tantum dissensionum esse: quid in duabus³ fore? victamne ut quisquam victrici patriae praeferret sineretque maiorem fortunam captis esse Veiiis, quam incolumibus fuerit? Postremo se relinqui a civibus in patria posse: ut relinquant patriam atque cives nullam vim unquam subacturam, et T. Sicinium—is enim ex tribunis plebis rogationis eius lator erat—conditorem Veios sequantur relicto deo Romulo, dei filio, parente et auctore urbis Romae.
- XXV. Haec cum foedis certaminibus agerentur—nam partem tribunorum plebi patres in suam sententiam traxerant,—nulla res alia manibus temperare plebem cogebat quam quod, ubi rixae committendae causa clamor ortus esset, principes senatus primi tur-

¹ ad habitandos Heerwagen: a habitandos P: habitandos Ω : habitando V.

² communi re publica (republica) Wissenborn: communi re V: communes reipublicae Ω .

³ duabus DLA: duabus urbibus Ω .

¹ See chap. xlix.

² Only two, in fact, according to chap. xxix. § 6, but one was enough to veto the motion.

in plain sight? The city, too, they preferred to B.C. 395
 the City of Rome, whether for situation, or for the splendour of its public and private buildings and its places. Nay, they even mooted the plan which certainly had a great following later, when the Gauls had captured Rome, of migrating to Veii.¹ For the rest, they intended that half of the plebs and half of the senate should dwell in Veii, regarding it as possible for the Roman people to inhabit two cities with a common polity.

This proposal the patricians opposed with such vehemence as to declare that they would sooner die in the sight of the Roman People than suffer anything of the sort to come to a vote; for when there was already so much dissension in a single city, what would it be in two? Was it possible that any man should prefer a vanquished to a victorious city, and suffer Veii captured to enjoy a greater fortune than Veii free? In fine, it was conceivable that they should be left behind in their native city by their fellow Romans; but to forsake their country and their fellow-citizens no violence should ever force them; they had no mind to follow Titus Sicinius—the tribune of the plebs who had proposed the bill—to Veii, as their founder, abandoning the god and god's son Romulus, the Father and Author of the Roman City.

XXV. These differences gave rise to disgraceful contentions—for the Fathers had won over some of the tribunes² to their opinion—and the only thing that compelled the plebs to stay their hands was this, that as often as they raised a shout, in order to begin a riot, the leaders of the senate were the first to confront the mob, bidding them visit blows,

- bae offerentes se peti feriri que atque occidi iubebant.
- 3 Ab horum aetatibus dignitatibusque et honoribus violandis dum abstinencebatur, et ad reliquos similes conatus verecundia irae obstabat.
- 4 Camillus identidem omnibus locis contionabatur : haud mirum id quidem esse, furere civitatem, quae damnata voti omnium rerum potiore curam quam
- 5 religione se exsolvendi habeat. Nihil de conlatione dicere, stipis verius quam decumae, quando ea se quisque privatim obligaverit, liberatus sit populus.
- 6 Enimvero illud se tacere suam conscientiam non pati quod ex ea tantum praeda quae rerum moventium sit decuma designetur : urbis atque agri capti, quae et ipsa voto contineatur, mentionem nullam fieri.
- 7 Cum ea disceptatio, anceps senatui visa, delegata ad pontifices esset, adhibito Camillo visum collegio, quod eius ante conceptum votum Veientium fuisset et post votum in potestatem populi Romani venisset, eius partem decimam Apollini sacram esse. Ita in
- 8 aestimationem urbs agerque venit. Pecunia ex aerario prompta, et tribunis militum consularibus ut aurum ex ea coemerent negotium datum. Cuius cum copia non esset, matronae coetibus ad eam rem consultandam habitis communi decreto pollicitae
- 9 aerarium detulerunt. Grata ea res ut quae maxime wounds, and death on them. The grey hairs of these men, their distinctions, and their honours, they shrank from outraging, and shame thwarted their rage in all similar attempts. B.C. 395

Camillus harangued the people constantly, and in all places. It was no wonder, he said, that the citizens had gone mad, since, bound though they were to carry out their vow, they were more concerned about everything else than about the discharge of their obligation. He would say nothing of their penny contribution—a truer name for it than tithe—since in this regard each man had bound himself as an individual, and the state was freed; but there was one thing his conscience would not suffer him to pass over in silence; to wit, that the tithe should be defined as consisting of that part only of the booty which was movable; and that nothing should be said of the captured city and its territory, which were likewise included in the vow.

Unable to agree on this point, the senate referred it to the pontiffs, who decided, after consulting with Camillus, that so far as these things had belonged to the Veientes before the vow was made, and had subsequently come into the possession of the Roman People, a tithe thereof was sacred to Apollo. Thus the city and the land came into the estimate. Money was drawn from the treasury, and the tribunes of the soldiers with consular rank were directed to purchase gold with it; and there being not enough of this metal, the matrons held meetings to consider the need, and binding themselves by a common resolution to supply the tribunes with gold, brought in all their ornaments to the treasury. No act was ever more acceptable to the senate, and to

A.U.C.
359

- senatui unquam fuit ; honoremque ob eam munificentiam ferunt matronis habitum ut pilento ad sacraludosque, carpentis festo profestoque uterentur.
- 10 Pondere ab singulis auri accepto aestimatoque ut pecuniae solverentur, crateram auream fieri placuit quae donum Apollini Delphos portaretur.
- 11 Simul ab religione animos remiserunt, integrant seditionem tribuni plebis ; incitatur multitudo in
- 12 omnes principes, ante alios in Camillum ; eum praedam Veientanam publicando sacrandoque ad nihilum redegisse. Absentes ferociter increpant ; praesentium, cum se ultro iratis offerrent, verecundiam
- 13 habent. Simul extrahi rem ex eo anno viderunt, tribunos plebis latores legis in annum eosdem reficiunt ; et patres hoc idem de intercessoribus legis adnisi. Ita tribuni plebis magna ex parte iidem refecti.

A.U.C.
360

- XXVI. Comitiis tribunorum militum patres summa ope evicerunt ut M. Furius Camillus crearetur. Propter bella simulabant parari ducem ; sed largitioni
- 2 tribuniciae adversarius quaerebatur. Cum Camillo creati tribuni militum consulari potestate L. Furius Medullinus sextum C. Aemilius L. Valerius Publicola
- 3 Sp. Postumius P. Cornelius iterum. Principio anni tribuni plebis nihil moverunt, donec M. Furius

¹ The proposed law mentioned in chap. xxiv. § 7.

² For the third time. See chap. xiv. § 5.

³ i. e., their proposal to divide up the lands of Veii.

⁴ Either Scipio or Cossus (chap. xxiv. § 1), or possibly Maluginensis (chap. xiv. § 1).

honour the matrons for their generosity, it is said to have voted that they might drive in four-wheeled carriages to festivals and games, and in two-wheeled cars on holy and working days. When the gold received from each had been appraised, in order that the moneys might be repaid, it was determined to make a golden bowl and carry it to Delphi as an offering to Apollo. B.C. 395

No sooner had they eased their minds of the vow, than the tribunes of the commons began again their agitation, inflaming the populace against all the nobles, but especially against Camillus, whom they charged with having reduced to naught the spoils of Veii, by devoting them to the state and to religion. If any of the leaders were absent, they were fiercely denounced; being present they outfaced their angry critics and shamed them into silence. As soon as the people saw that the question would be carried over from that year, they worked for the re-election of the tribunes of the plebs who were backing the measure;¹ and the patricians exerted themselves to do the same for its opponents. So, for the most part, the same tribunes were returned to office.

XXVI. At the voting for military tribunes, the senators with much ado obtained the election of Marcus Furius Camillus.² The need of a commander for the wars was their pretext, but what they really wanted was a man who would combat the lavishness of the tribunes.³ With Camillus were elected to that office, Lucius Furius Medullinus (for the sixth time), Gaius Aemilius, Lucius Valerius Publicola, Spurius Postumius, and (for the second time) Publius Cornelius.⁴ At the outset of the year the tribunes of the commons made no move, until Marcus Furius B.C. 394

Camillus in Faliscos, cui id bellum mandatum erat proficisceretur. Differendo deinde elanguit res, et Camillo, quem adversarium maxime metuebant, 4 gloria in Faliscis crevit. Nam cum primo moenibus se hostes tenerent tutissimum id rati, populatione agrorum atque incendiis villarum coegit eos egredi
 5 urbe. Sed timor longius progredi prohibuit; mille fere passuum ab oppido castra locant nulla re alia fidentes ea satis tuta esse quam difficultate aditus, asperis confragosisque circa et partim artis partim 6 arduis viis. Ceterum Camillus captivum indidem ¹ ex agris secutus ducem castris multa nocte motis
 prima luce aliquanto superioribus locis se ostendit.
 7 Trifariam Romani muniebant, alius exercitus proelio intentus stabat. Ibi impedire opus conatos hostes fundit fugatque; tantumque inde pavoris Faliscis iniectum est ut effusa fuga castra sua quae propiora 8 erant praelati urbem peterent. Multi caesi vulneratique priusquam paventes portis inciderent. Castra capta; praeda ad quaestores redacta cum magna militum ira; sed severitate imperii victi eandem 9 virtutem et oderant et mirabantur. Obsidio inde urbis et munitiones, et interdum per occasionem impetus oppidanorum in Romanas stationes proelia-

¹ indidem Kern: indecem M: indicem Ω.

BOOK V. xxvi. 3-9

Camillus should march against the Faliscans, for to him this war had been committed. Then came delays, and men's enthusiasm waned, while Camillus, the opponent whom they chiefly feared, won fresh renown in the Faliscan country. For though at first the enemy kept within their walls, deeming this their safest course, he compelled them, by ravaging their fields and burning their farm-houses, to come out of their city. Still, they were afraid to advance very far, and pitched their camp about a mile from the town, trusting that it was quite safe, without other reason than the difficulty of approaching it; for the ground about it was rough and broken, and the roads were either narrow or steep. But Camillus, employing a prisoner taken in that very region for his guide, broke camp in the dead of night, and showed himself at earliest dawn in a considerably superior position. The Romans, divided into three shifts, began to build a rampart, the soldiers who were not working standing by in readiness to fight. There, when the enemy sought to hinder the work, he defeated and routed them; and so great was the panic that came over the Faliscans, that they fled in disorder past their camp, which was the nearer refuge, and made for the town; and many were slain or wounded, before, in their terror, they could rush in through the gates. The camp was taken, and the booty was paid over to the quaestors. This incensed the troops, but they were overborne by the strictness of the discipline, and admired, while they detested, their general's probity. Then came a blockade of the town, and the construction of siege-works; and sometimes, when opportunity offered, the townsfolk would raid the Roman outposts and que parva fieri, et teri tempus neutro inclinata spe, cum frumentum copiaeque aliae ex ante convecto largius obsessis quam obsidentibus suppeterent.

10 Videbaturque aequae diuturnus futurus labor ac Veis fuisset, ni fortuna imperatori Romano simul et cognitae rebus bellicis virtutis specimen et maturam victoriam dedisset.

XXVII. Mos erat Faliscis eodem magistro liberorum et comite uti, simulque plures pueri, quod hodie quoque in Graecia manet, unius curae demandabantur. Principum liberos, sicut fere fit, qui scientia

2 videbatur praecellere erudiebat. Is cum in pace instituisset pueros ante urbem lusus exercendique causa producere, nihil eo more per belli tempus intermisso, modo¹ brevioribus modo longioribus spatiis trahendo eos a porta lusu sermonibusque variatis, longius solito ubi res dedit progressus inter stationes eos hostium castraque inde Romana in

3 praetorium ad Camillum perduxit. Ibi scelesto

4 facinori scelestiorem sermonem addit, Falerios se in manus Romanis tradidisse, quando eos pueros quorum parentes capita ibi rerum sint in potestatem² dederit. Quae ubi Camillus audivit, "Non ad similem"

5 inquit "tui nec populum nec imperatorem scelestus

6 ipse cum scelesto munere venisti. Nobis cum Faliscis

¹ modo Hertz: dum modo Ω.

² in potestatem Ald.: in potestate Ω.

skirmishes would ensue. Time wore on, without B.C. 394 bringing hope to either side; the besieged had corn and other supplies, which they had laid up beforehand in greater abundance than the besiegers; and it began to seem as though the struggle would be as long drawn out as at Veii, had not Fortune, at one stroke, given the Roman general an opportunity to display the magnanimity already familiar from his exploits in war, and an early victory.

XXVII. It was customary amongst the Faliscans to employ the same person as teacher and attendant of their children, and they used to intrust a number of lads at the same time to the care of one man, a practice which still obtains in Greece. The children of the chief men, as is commonly the case, were under the tuition of one who was regarded as their foremost scholar. This man had in time of peace got into the way of leading the boys out in front of the city for play and exercise, and during the war made no change in his routine, but would draw them sometimes a shorter, sometimes a longer distance from the gate, with this and that game and story, until being farther away one day than usual, he seized the opportunity to bring them amongst the enemy's outposts, and then into the Roman camp, to the headquarters of Camillus. He then followed up his villainous act with an even more villainous speech, saying that he had given Falerii into the hands of the Romans, having delivered up to them the children of those whose fathers were in power there. On hearing this Camillus answered: "Neither the people nor the captain to whom you are come, you scoundrel, with your scoundrel's gift, is like yourself. Between us and the Faliscans is no fellowquae pacto fit humano societas non est: quam in-generavit natura utrisque est eritique. Sunt et belli sicut pacis iura, iustequae ea non minus quam fortiter 7 didicimus gerere. Arma habemus non adversus eam aetatem cui etiam captis urbibus parcitur, sed adversus armatos et ipsos, qui nec laesi nec lacessiti a nobis 8 castra Romana ad Veios oppugnarunt. Eos tu quantum in te fuit novo scelere vicisti: ego Romanis artibus, virtute opere armis, sicut Veios vincam.” 9 Denudatum deinde eum manibus post tergum in-ligatis reducendum Falerios pueris tradidit, virgasque eis quibus proditorem agerent in urbem verberantes 10 dedit. Ad quod spectaculum concursu populi primum facto, deinde a magistratibus de re nova vocato senatu tanta mutatio animis est iniecta ut qui modo efferati odio iraque Veientium exitum paene quam Capenatium pacem mallent, apud eos pacem universa 11 posceret civitas. Fides Romana, iustitia imperatoris in foro et curia celebrantur; consensuque omnium

 legati ad Camillum in castra, atque inde permissu Camilli Romam ad senatum, qui dederent Falerios 12 proficiscuntur. Introducti ad senatum ita locuti traduntur: “Patres conscripti, victoria cui nec deus nec homo quisquam invideat victi a vobis et impera-

ship founded on men's covenants; but the fellowship B.C. 394 which nature has implanted in both sides is there and will abide. There are rights of war as well as of peace, and we have learnt to use them justly no less than bravely. We bear no weapons against those tender years which find mercy even in the storming of a city, but against those who are armed themselves, who, without wrong or provocation at our hands, attacked the Roman camp at Veii. Those people you have done your best to conquer by an unheard-of crime. I shall conquer them, as I conquered Veii, in the Roman way, by dint of courage, toil, and arms." He then had the fellow stripped,
 his hands bound behind his back, and gave him up to the boys to lead back to Falerii, providing them with rods to scourge the traitor as they drove him into town. To behold this spectacle, there was at first a great gathering together of the people, and presently the magistrates called a meeting of the senate about the strange affair, and men underwent such a revulsion of feeling, that those who a short time before, in the fury of their hate and resentment would almost have preferred the doom of Veii to the peace of Capena, were now calling for peace, with the voice of an entire city. The honesty of the Romans, and the justice of their general, were praised in market-place and senate-house, and, with the consent of all, envoys proceeded to Camillus in his camp, and thence, by his permission, to the Roman senate, to surrender Falerii. Being introduced into the Curia they are said to have spoken as follows: "Conscript Fathers, you and your general have won a victory over us which no one, whether God or man, could begrudge you, and we tore vestro dedimus nos vobis, rati, quo nihil victori pulchrius est, melius nos sub imperio vestro quam 13 legibus nostris victuros. Eventu huius belli duo salutaria exempla prodita humano generi sunt: vos fidem in bello quam praesentem victoriam maluistis;

 14 nos fide provocati victoriam ultro detulimus. Sub ditione vestra sumus; mittite qui arma, qui obsides, 15 qui urbem patentibus portis accipiant. Nec vos fidei nostrae nec nos imperii vestri paenitebit.” Camillo et ab hostibus et a civibus gratiae actae. Faliscis in stipendium militum eius anni, ut populus Romanus tributo vacaret, pecunia imperata. Pace data exercitus Romam reductus.

XXVIII. Camillus, meliore multo laude quam cum triumphantem albi per urbem vexerant equi insignis, iustitia fideque hostibus victis cum in urbem redisset, taciti¹ eius verecundiam non tulit senatus quin sine
 2 mora voti liberaretur; crateramque auream donum Apollini Delphos legati qui ferrent, L. Valerius L. Sergius A. Manlius, missi longa una nave haud procul freto Siculo a piratis Liparensium excepti deve-
 3 huntur Liparas. Mos erat civitatis velut publico latrocinio partam praedam dividere. Forte eo anno in summo magistratu erat Timasitheus quidam,
 4 Romanis vir similior quam suis; qui legatorum nomen

¹ taciti Gronovius V: tacite Ω.

give ourselves into your hands, believing (than which B.C. 394 nothing can be more honourable to a victor) that we shall be better off under your government than under our own laws. The outcome of this war has afforded the human race two wholesome precedents: you have set fair-dealing in war above immediate victory; and we, challenged by your fair-dealing, have freely granted you that victory. We are under your sway; send men to receive our arms and hostages, and our city, the gates of which stand open. Neither shall you be disappointed in our fidelity nor we in your rule." Camillus was thanked both by his enemies and by his fellow citizens. The Faliscans were commanded to pay the soldiers for that year, that the Roman People might be exempted from the war tax. Peace being granted, the Roman army was led home.

XXVIII. Camillus, having returned to the City distinguished by a far better kind of glory than when he had entered it in triumph drawn by white horses—for he had conquered his enemies by justice and fair-dealing—uttered no reproaches, but the senators were ill-at-ease till they should free him, without delay, from the obligation of his vow. And so, to carry the golden bowl as a gift to Apollo at Delphi, they appointed Lucius Valerius, Lucius Sergius, and Aulus Manlius, who, being dispatched in a single warship, were captured by Liparaean pirates not far from the Sicilian Straits and carried to Liparae. It was the manner of that people to divide up the booty which they had obtained by a kind of public piracy, but it chanced that year that one Timasitheus was chief magistrate, a man more resembling the Romans than his own countrymen;

donumque et deum cui mitteretur et doni causam veritus ipse multitudinem quoque, quae semper ferme regenti est similis, religionis iustae implevit adductosque in publicum hospitium legatos cum praesidio etiam navium Delphos prosecutus, Romam inde 5 sospites restituit. Hospitium cum eo senatus consulto est factum donaque publice data.

Eodem anno in Aequis varie bellatum, adeo ut in incerto fuerit et apud ipsos exercitus et Romae vicis-6 sent victine essent. Imperatores Romani fuere ex tribunis militum C. Aemilius Sp. Postumius. Primo rem communiter gesserunt; fusis inde acie hostibus Aemilium praesidio Verruginem obtinere placuit,
7 Postumium fines vastare. Ibi eum incomposito agmine negligentius ab re bene gesta euntem adorti Aequi terrore iniecto in proximos compulere tumulos; pavorque inde Verruginem etiam ad praesidium
8 alterum est perlatus. Postumius suis in tutum receptis cum contione advocata terrorem increparet ac fugam, fusos esse ab ignavissimo ac fugacissimo hoste, conclamat universus exercitus merito se ea audire et fateri admissum flagitium, sed eosdem correcturos esse neque diuturnum id gaudium hostibus who, himself revering the title of the envoys and their gift, as well as the god to whom it was being sent and the cause of the oblation, imbued also the people, who are almost always like their ruler, with a due sense of religious awe; and after entertaining the ambassadors in the guest-house of the state, even sent ships to convoy them to Delphi, and thence brought them safely back to Rome. A covenant of hospitality was made with him by decree of the senate, and gifts were presented him in the name of the state. B.C. 394

The same year there was a war with the Aequi, of so varied fortune that it was not clear, either at the front itself or in Rome, whether the upshot had been victory or defeat. The Roman generals were two of the military tribunes, Gaius Aemilius and Spurius Postumius. At first they exercised the command conjointly; afterwards, when they had routed the enemy in battle, they arranged that Aemilius should hold Verrugo with a garrison, while Postumius should lay waste the country. As he was leading his troops in irregular formation, somewhat carelessly in consequence of his success, the Aequi fell upon them and throwing them into confusion drove them to the nearest hills, whence the panic spread even to Verrugo, to the other army. Postumius having rallied his men in a position of safety, called them together and chid them for their alarm and flight, telling them they had been discomfited by the most craven and fugitive of foes. Whereat the army cried out as one man, that they deserved his reproaches, and confessed the enormity of their misconduct, but promised that they would themselves mend it, and that their enemies' joy should be short-lived. Demanding to B.C. 394 be led forthwith against the camp of the Aequi—which was in full sight in the plain where they had pitched it—they professed themselves willing to undergo any punishment if they should not have stormed it before nightfall. Postumius commended them and bade them sup and be ready at the fourth watch. The enemy, too, that they might cut off any retreat by night along the road to Verrugo, from the hill where the Romans lay, were afield

 and met them, and the battle began before daylight, but there was a moon all night. They could see to fight as well as in the daytime; but the shouts were heard in Verrugo, the soldiers believed the Roman camp was being attacked, and so great was their consternation that, despite the efforts of Aemilius to check them and despite his appeals, they fled in a scattered rout to Tusculum. From thence a rumour was carried to Rome that Postumius and the army were destroyed. But Postumius, as soon as the first rays of light had removed all fear of ambuscades in case of a wide-spread pursuit, rode down the line, reminding his men of the promises they had given him, and inspired such ardour that the Aequi could no longer withstand their charge, and were slaughtered while they fled (as happens when rage is more concerned than valour), till their army was clean destroyed; and the gloomy tidings from Tusculum which had thrown the City into a needless fright, were succeeded by a laurel-wreathed letter from Postumius, announcing the victory of the Roman People and the annihilation of the Aequian army.

XXIX. The measures introduced by the tribunes B.C. 393

A.U.C.
361

invenerant finem, et plebs continuare latoribus legis tribunatum et patres reficere intercessores legis ad-2 nisi sunt; sed plus suis comitiis plebs valuit. Quem doloremulti patres sunt senatus consulto facto ut consules, invisus plebi magistratus, crearentur. Annum post quintum decimum creati consules L.
3 Lucretius Flavius Ser.¹ Sulpicius Camerinus. Princi-pio huius anni ferociter, quia nemo ex collegio inter-cessurus erat, coortis ad perferendam legem tribunis plebis nec segnius ob id ipsum consulibus resistenti-bus omni que civitate in unam eam curam conversa
Vitelliam coloniam Romanam in suo agro Aequi
4 expugnant. Colonorum pars maxima incolumis, quia nocte proditione oppidum captum liberam per aversa 5 urbis fugam dederat, Romam perfugere. L. Lucretio consuli ea provincia evenit. Is cum exercitu profectus acie hostes vicit, victorque Romam ad maius 6 aliquanto certamen redit. Dies dicta erat tribunis plebis biennii superioris A. Verginio et Q. Pomponio, quos defendi patrum consensu ad fidem senatus pertinebat; neque enim eos aut vitae ullo crimine alio aut gesti magistratus quisquam arguebat prae-terquam quod gratificantes patribus rogationi tri-7 buniciae intercessissent. Vicit tamen gratiam senatus

¹ Ser. 5 (C.I.L. i², p. 119 and Diod. xv. viii. 1): Sergius Ω.

¹ Providing for the division of the Roman People between Rome and Veii. See chap. xxiv. § 7.

of the plebs being still undecided, the commons B.C. 393 strove to prolong the tenure of the supporters of the bill,¹ and the patricians to re-elect the tribunes who had vetoed it; but in the election of their own magistrates the plebeians proved the stronger, a disappointment which the Fathers avenged by passing a resolution in the senate providing for the election of consuls—a magistracy odious to the plebs. There had been no consuls for fifteen years, when they elected Lucius Lucretius Flavus, and Servius Sulpicius Camerinus. In the beginning of this year, the tribunes united in a spirited attempt—for none of the college was disposed to object—to carry the bill; and the consuls, for that very reason, were quite as active in opposing them. While the whole body politic was absorbed in this one concern, Vitellia, a Roman colony, was captured by the Aequi, in whose territory it was situated. The greatest part of the settlers escaped, for the place was taken by treachery at night and their flight through the opposite quarter of the town was unopposed, and made their way to Rome in safety. To Lucius Lucretius the consul fell the command in this affair. Marching out with his army, he defeated the enemy in a battle and returned victorious to the City, where he found a far more serious struggle impending. A day of trial had been appointed for the plebeian tribunes of two years before, namely Aulus Verginius and Quintus Pomponius, to defend whom the senate, as the patricians all agreed, was in honour bound; for no man brought any charge against their lives or the conduct of their office, except their having, out of complaisance to the Fathers, opposed the tribunician law. But the in-

plebis ira, et pessimo exemplo innoxii denis milibus 8 gravis aeris condemnati sunt. Id aegre passi patres.
 Camillus palam sceleris plebem arguere, quae iam in suos versa non intellexeret se pravo iudicio de tribunis intercessionem sustulisse, intercessione sublata 9 tribuniciam potestatem evertisse¹; nam quod illi sperarent effrenatam licentiam eius magistratus patres laturos, falli eos. Si tribunicia vis tribunicio auxilio repelli nequeat, aliud telum patres inventu-10 ros esse. Consulesque increpabat quod fide publica decipi tribunos eos taciti tulissent qui senatus auctoritatem secuti essent. Haec propalam contionabun-dus in dies magis augebat iras hominum.

XXX. Senatum vero incitare adversus legem haud desistebat: ne aliter descenderent in forum, cum dies ferendae legis venisset, quam ut qui meminissent sibi pro aris focusque et deum templis ac solo in quo
 2 nati essent dimicandum fore. Nam quod ad se privatim attineat, si suae gloriae sibi inter dimicationem patriae meminisse sit fas, sibi amplum quoque esse
 urbem ab se captam frequentari, cottidie se frui

¹ evertisse Rhenanus: euertissent Ω.

fluence of the senators was out-weighed by the B.C. 393 resentment of the plebs, and a shameful precedent was set, when the innocent men were condemned each to pay a fine of 10,000 asses. This roused the indignation of the senate. Camillus frankly denounced the depravity of the commons, who having turned against their own representatives, failed to perceive that they had by their wicked judgment of the tribunes done away with the veto, and that in doing away with the veto they had overthrown the tribunician power. For if they supposed that the unbridled licence of that office would be tolerated by the Fathers, they were mistaken; if tribunician violence could not be resisted by the help of tribunes, the senators must find some other weapon. He rebuked the consuls also, because they had, without protesting, allowed those tribunes who had followed the guidance of the senate to suffer for their reliance on the guarantee of state protection. By such sentiments, publicly expressed in speeches, he angered the people more and more from day to day.

XXX. As to the senate, he ceased not to encourage it in opposing the law: they must go down into the Forum, when the day should arrive for voting on it, in no other spirit than that of men who realized that they had to fight for hearth and home, for the temples of their gods, and for the soil of their birth. So far, indeed, as the question touched his private interest, it would actually be an honour to him, if it were not sinful to be thinking of his own renown while his country was struggling for life, that the city he had won should be thronged with people; that he should

LIVY

A.U.C.
361

- monumento gloriae suae et ante oculos habere urbem
latam in triumpho suo, insistere omnes vestigiis 3 laudum suarum; sed nefas ducere desertam ac re-lictam ab dis immortalibus incoli urbem, et in captivo solo habitare populum Romanum et victrice patria victam mutari.
- 4 His adhortationibus principis¹ concitati patres, senes iuvenesque, cum ferretur lex agmine facto in forum venerunt, dissipatique per tribus suos quisque 5 tribules prensantes orare cum lacrimis coepere ne eam patriam pro qua fortissime felicissimeque ipsi ac
patres eorum dimicassent desererent, Capitolium, aedem Vestae, cetera circa templa deorum osten-6 tantes; ne exsulem, extorrem populum Romanum ab solo patrio ac dis penatibus in hostium urbem agerent, eoque rem adducerent ut melius fuerit non capi
7 Veios, ne Roma desereretur. Quia non vi agebant sed precibus et inter preces multa deorum mentio
erat, religiosum parti maximae fuit, et legem una² 8 plures tribus antiquarunt quam iusserunt. Adeoque ea victoria laeta patribus fuit ut postero die referentibus consulibus senatus consultum fieret ut agri Veientani septena iugera plebi dividerentur, nec
patribus familiae tantum, sed ut omnium in domo

¹ principis ς : principes Ω .

² una $A^2\varsigma$: unam Ω .

¹ Livy is thinking of the custom which grew up later of exhibiting in the triumphal procession models or pictures of towns, rivers, and mountains, belonging to the conquered nation.

² There were at this time twenty-one tribes.

daily be reminded of his glory, and have before his eyes the town which had figured in his triumph;¹ that all men should tread in the footsteps of his fame. But he thought it an offence against Heaven that a city deserted and forsaken by the immortal gods should be inhabited, and that the Roman People should dwell on conquered soil, exchanging their victorious City for a vanquished one.

These earnest words of their leading member so stirred the senators, old men as well as young, that on the day the law was proposed they formed in a body and came into the Forum, where they dispersed among the tribes, and canvassing every man his own tribesmen, began with tears to beseech them, that they would not forsake that City for which both they and their fathers had fought with the greatest courage and good fortune. They pointed to the Capitol, to the shrine of Vesta, and to the other temples standing all about them; they begged them not to drive the Roman People, an exile, and a wanderer from its native land and its household gods, to the city of its enemies, nor to carry things so far that it would be better that Veii had not been taken, so that Rome might not be deserted. Since the patricians used not force but entreaties, and in their entreaties made many a reference to the gods, the greater part felt the prick of conscience, and the law was rejected by one more tribe than voted in its favour.² And so greatly did this victory rejoice the Fathers, that next day, at the instance of the consuls, a decree was passed by the senate, that seven iugera of the Veientine land should be apportioned to every plebeian, and not alone to the heads of families, but so as to reckon in all the free-born members of the liberorum capitum ratio haberetur, vellentque in eam spem liberos tollere.

A.U.C.
361

A.U.C.
362

XXXI. Eo munere delenita plebe nihil certatum
2 est quo minus consularia comitia haberentur. Creati consules L. Valerius Potitus M. Manlius, cui Capito-lino postea fuit cognomen. Hi consules magnos ludos fecere, quos M. Furius dictator voverat Veienti 3 bello. Eodem anno aedes Iunonis reginae ab eodem dictatore eodemque bello vota dedicatur, celebra-tamque dedicationem ingenti matronarum studio tradunt.

4 Bellum haud memorabile in Algido cum Aequis
gestum est, fuis hostibus prius paene quam manus consererent. Valerio, quod perseverantior iis caedendis ¹ in fuga fuit, triumphus, Manlio ut ovans ingrede-5 retur urbem, decretum est. Eodem anno novum bellum cum Volsiniensibus exortum; quo propter
famem pestilentiamque in agro Romano ex siccitate caloribusque nimis ortam exercitus duci nequivit.
Ob quae Volsinienses Sappinatibus ² adiunctis super-6 bia inflati ultro agros Romanos incursavere; bellum inde duobus populis indictum.

C. Iulius censor decessit; in eius locum M. Cornelius suffectus, quae res postea religioni fuit quia eo

¹ iis caedendis Weissenborn: caedendis (or ce-) Ω : caed..dis V: gaedendis M: gerendis BP²FU (omitted by P):
gerendis (with c above) E.

² Sappinatibus Mommsen (cf. chap. xxxii. § 2): salpinati-bus Ω : sapienatibus V: scalpinatibus M.

¹ At VI. xvii. 5 Livy implies that Manlius was given the cognomen because of his defence of the Capitol (chap. xlvii.), but at IV. xlii. 2 a L. Manlius Capitolinus had been mentioned, and the surname was probably due to the family's residing on the Capitoline.

household, that with such a prospect before them B.C. 393 men might be willing to rear children.

XXXI. Appeased by this largess, the plebs made B.C. 392
no objection to an assembly for the election of consuls, and the choice fell on Lucius Valerius Potitus and Marcus Manlius, afterwards surnamed Capitolinus.¹ These consuls celebrated the Great Games, which Marcus Furius the dictator had vowed in the war with Veii. This year saw also the dedication of a temple to Queen Juno, vowed by the same dictator in the same war; and tradition relates that the ceremony was attended by throngs of enthusiastic matrons.

A campaign in no way memorable was fought with the Aequi on Mount Algidus, the enemy being routed before they had well begun to fight. Valerius was the more persistent in cutting them down as they fled, and to him was decreed a triumph; Manlius was allowed to enter the City in an ovation.² In this year also a new war broke out, namely with the people of Volsinii. Owing to a famine and pestilence which arose in the Roman territories on account of drought and excessive heat, it was impossible to send an army against them; and in consequence of this the Volsinienses, having added the Sappinates³ to their forces, were puffed up with pride and made an incursion themselves into the fields of the Romans. War was then declared against both nations.

Gaius Julius, the censor, died, and Marcus Cornelius was substituted in his place, a circumstance

² A lesser triumph, in which the victorious general entered the City on foot.

³ Sappinum, a town otherwise unknown, is presumed to have been situated near Volsinii.

A.U.C.
362

lustrum Roma est capta; nec deinde unquam in de-7 mortui locum censor sufficitur. Consulibusque morbo implicitis placuit per interregnum renovari auspicia.
 8 Itaque cum ex senatus consulto consules magistratu se abdicassent, interrex creatur M. Furius Camillus, qui P. Cornelium Scipionem, is deinde L. Valerium 9 Potitum interregem prodidit. Ab eo creati sex tri-buni militum consulari potestate ut, etiam si cui eorum incommoda valetudo fuisset, copia magistra-tum rei publicae esset.

A.U.C.
363

XXXII. Kalendis Quinutilibus magistratum ocoepere L. Lucretius Ser. Sulpicius M. Aemilius L.
 Furius Medullinus septimum Agrippa Furius C.
 2 Aemilius iterum. Ex his L. Lucretio et C. Aemilio Volsinienses ¹ provincia evenit, Sappinates ² Agrippae
 Furio et Ser. Sulpicio. Prius cum Volsiniensibus 3 pugnatum est. Bellum numero hostium ingens, certamine haud sane asperum fuit. Fusa primo concursu acies; in fugam versa milia octo armatorum ab equitibus interclusa positis armis in deditionem 4 venerunt. Eius belli fama effecit, ne se pugnae committerent Sappinates; moenibus armati se tutabantur. Romani praedas passim et ex Sappinati ³ agro et ex Volsiniensi nullo eam vim arcente egerunt;

¹ Volsinienses Madrig: Vols . . . ses V: uolsiniensis
 (or uuls-) Ω .

² Sappinates HDL (here and in § 4): salpinates (salpp-
P) Ω : sal sappinates M: wanting in V.

³ Sappinati Mommsen: salpinati Ω : sa . . pinati V.

¹ Thereafter the survivor resigned and two new censors were appointed (IX. xxxiv. 21).

which was afterwards thought to have offended the gods, because in this lustrum Rome was captured ; nor from that day has a censor ever been appointed in the room of one who has died.¹ The consuls, too, caught the plague, and it was voted that fresh auspices should be obtained by means of an interregnum. Accordingly, when the consuls, in obedience to the senate's decree, had abdicated, Marcus Furius Camillus was appointed interrex, and named as his successor Publius Cornelius Scipio, who, in turn, named Lucius Valerius Potitus interrex ; under whom they elected six military tribunes of consular rank, so that even if any of them should fall ill the state might still have magistrates. B.C. 392

XXXII. On the first day of July they entered office, to wit, Lucius Lucretius, Servius Sulpicius, Marcus Aemilius, Lucius Furius Medullinus (for the seventh time), Furius Agrippa, and (for the second time) Gaius Aemilius. Of these, Lucius Lucretius and Gaius Aemilius were assigned the war with Volsinii as their province, while the Sappinates fell to Furius Agrippa and Servius Sulpicius. The Volsinians were encountered first, in a campaign of great magnitude in respect to the enemy's numbers, though the engagement with them was no very sharp affair. Their line broke at the first assault, and in the rout eight thousand soldiers were cut off by the cavalry, and laying down their arms, surrendered. When the Sappinates heard of this campaign, they refused to risk a battle, but retired within their walls and prepared to defend themselves. The Romans plundered right and left, both the lands of Sappinum and those of Volsinii, without finding any to resist their force, until the Volsini- B.C. 391

- 5 donec Volsiniensibus fessis bello ea condicione ut res populo Romano redderent stipendiumque eius anni exercitui praestarent, in viginti annos indutiae datae.
- 6 Eodem anno M. Caedicius de plebe nuntiavit tribunis se in Nova via, ubi nunc sacellum est supra aedem Vestae, vocem noctis silentio audisse clariorem humana, quae magistratibus dici iuberet Gallos ad-
- 7 ventare. Id, ut fit, propter auctoris humilitatem spretum et quod longinqua eoque ignotior gens erat. Neque deorum modo monita ingruente fato spreta, sed humanam quoque opem, quae una erat, M.
- 8 Furium ab urbe amovere. Qui die dicta ab L. Apuleio tribuno plebis propter praedam Veientanam, filio quoque adulescente per idem tempus orbatus cum accitis domum tribulibus clientibusque, quae ¹ magna pars plebis erat, percontatus animos eorum responsum tulisset se conlaturos quanti damnatus esset,
- 9 absolvere eum non posse, in exilium abiit, precatus ab dis immortalibus si innoxio sibi ea iniuria fieret, primo quoque tempore desiderium sui civitati ingratae facerent. Absens quindecim milibus gravis aeris damnatur.

XXXIII. Expulso cive quo manente, si quicquam humanorum certi est, capi Roma non potuerat, adventante fatali urbi clade legati ab Clusinis veniunt enemies wearied of the war, and upon their agreeing to set to restore the goods of the Roman People and furnish pay for the army for that campaign, they were granted a truce of twenty years.

¹ clientibusque, quae 5 : clientibus quae (que E : quae *E*² or *E*³ : q BD : q que *D*⁴) Ω : eo clientibus quae M : et clientulus quae *A*¹ : wanting in V.

The same year Marcus Caelicius, a plebeian, reported to the tribunes, that in the Nova Via, where the chapel now stands above the temple of Vesta, he had heard in the silence of the night a voice more distinct than a man's, which bade him tell the magistrates that the Gauls were approaching. This portent was neglected, as often happens, because of the informant's humble station, and because that race was remote and therefore not well known. And not only did they reject the warnings of Heaven, as their doom drew nearer, but they even sent away from the City the only human assistance present with them, in the person of Marcus Furius. He had been indicted by Lucius Apuleius, tribune of the plebs, on account of the spoils of Veii, just at the time of losing his youthful son. Summoning to his house his fellow tribunes and his clients (who formed a good part of the plebs), he roused their feelings, and having been answered that they would make up such an amount as he might be fined, but that they could not acquit him, he departed into exile, beseeching the immortal gods that if he were an innocent man to whom that wrong was done they would speedily make his thankless fellow citizens wish to have him back. He was fined in his absence in the sum of 15,000 asses.

XXXIII. After the expulsion of that citizen whose presence of anything in the life is certain, would have made the capture of Rome impossible, disaster approached the ill-fated City with the arrival of

- 2 auxilium adversus Gallos petentes. Eam gentem traditur fama dulcedine frugum maximeque vini, 3 ab Etruscis ante cultos possedisse; et invexisse in Galliam vinum inliciendae gentis causa Arruntem Clusinum ira corruptae uxoris ab Lucumone, cui tutor is fuerat,¹ praepotente iuvene et a quo expeti poenae, nisi externa vis quaesita esset, nequirent;
4 hunc transeuntibus Alpes ducem auctoremque Clusium oppugnandi fuisse. Equidem haud abnuerim Clusium Gallos ab Arrunte seu quo alio Clusino 5 adductos; sed eos qui oppugnaverint Clusium non fuisse qui primi Alpes transierint satis constat.
Ducentis quippe annis ante quam Clusium oppug-narent urbemque Romam caperent, in Italiam Galli 6 transcenderunt; nec cum his primum Etruscorum sed multo ante cum iis qui inter Appenninum Alpes-que incolebant saepe exercitus Gallici pugnare.
7 Tuscorum ante Romanum imperium late terra marique opes patuere. Mari supero inferoque, quibus Italia insulae modo cingitur, quantum potuerint nomina sunt argumento, quod alterum Tuscum com-8 muni vocabulo gentis, alterum Hadriaticum² ab
Hatria,³ Tuscorum colonia, vocavere Italicae gentes; Graeci eadem Tyrrhenum atque Adriaticum vocant.
9 Ei⁴ in utrumque mare vergentes incoluere urbibus

¹ is fuerat Conway: ipse fuerat V: is (es M) fuerat ipse Ω : fuerat ipse *A*².

² Hadriaticum ς : hadriaticum V: atriaticum MPFUB: adriaticum M²OEHDLA.

³ ab Hatria Conway (The Italic Dialects, p. 450): mare ab atria (or adria) Ω .

⁴ vocant. Ei ς : uocant et Ω : uocante. PFBE?: nocantes
U: uocat. Et *M*²: uocant. Et *M*³: uocant *OE*³.

BOOK V. XXXIII. 1-9

envoys from the men of Clusium seeking help B.C. 391
against the Gauls. The story runs that this race, allured by the delicious fruits and especially the wine—then a novel luxury—had crossed the Alps and possessed themselves of lands that had before been tilled by the Etruscans; and that wine had been imported into Gaul expressly to entice them, by Arruns of Clusium, in his anger at the seduction of his wife by Lucumo. This youth, whose guardian he had been, was so powerful that he could not have chastised him without calling in a foreign force. He it was who is said to have guided the Gauls across the Alps, and to have suggested the attack on Clusium. Now I would not deny that Arruns or some other citizen brought the Gauls to Clusium, but that those who besieged Clusium were not the first who had passed the Alps is generally agreed. Indeed it was two hundred years before the attack on Clusium and the capture of Rome, that the Gauls first crossed over into Italy; neither were the Clusini the first of the Etruscans with whom they fought; but long before that the Gallic armies had often given battle to those who dwelt between the Apennines and the Alps.

The Tuscan sway, down to the rise of the Roman domination, stretched over a wide expanse of land and sea. How great their power was on the upper and the lower seas, by which Italy is surrounded like an island, is apparent from the names, since the Italian races have called one of them Tuscan, the general designation of the race, and the other Hadriatic, from Hatria, an Etruscan colony; and the Greeks know the same seas as Tyrrhenian and Adriatic. In the lands which slope on either side

A.U.C.
363

duodenis terras, prius cis Appenninum ad inferum mare, postea trans Appenninum totidem, quot capita 10 originis erant, coloniis missis, quae trans Padum
omnia loca, excepto Venetorum angulo qui sinum 11 circumcolunt maris, usque ad Alpes tenuere. Alpinis quoque ea gentibus haud dubie origo est, maxime Raetis,¹ quos loca ipsa efferarunt ne quid ex antiquo praeter sonum linguae, nec eum incorruptum, retinerent.

XXXIV. De transitu in Italiam Gallorum haec accepimus: Prisco Tarquinio Romae regnante Cel-tarum, quae pars Galliae tertia est, penes Bituriges summa imperii fuit; ii regem Celtico dabant.
2 Ambigatus is fuit, virtute fortunaque cum sua tum publica praepollens, quod in imperio eius Gallia adeo frugum hominumque fertilis fuit ut abundans multi-3 tudo vix regi videretur posse. Hic magno natu ipse iam exonerare praegravante turba regnum cupiens, Bellovesum ac Segovesum, sororis filios, impigros iuvenes, missurum se esse in quas di dedissent auguriis sedes ostendit: quantum ipsi vellent numerum 4 hominum excirent, ne qua gens arcere advenientes posset. Tum Segoveso sortibus dati Hercynei saltus;

¹ Raetis Madvig: raetiis(or retiis or reciis) Ω: ratiis D?: ratus A.

¹ The Hyrceinei saltus were the upland districts of South Germany (including the Black Forest, Bohemia, and the Hartz) where both Caesar and Tacitus intimate that Celts had formerly established settlements (B.G. vi. xxiv.; Germ. xxviii.).

towards one of these seas, they had twice twelve cities; first the twelve on this side the Apennines, towards the lower sea; to which afterwards they added the same number beyond the Apennines, sending over as many colonies as there were original cities, and taking possession of all the transpadane region (except the angle belonging to the Veneti who dwell about the gulf) as far as the Alps. The Alpine tribes have also, no doubt, the same origin, especially the Raetians; who have been rendered so savage by the very nature of the country as to retain nothing of their ancient character save the sound of their speech, and even that is corrupted.

XXXIV. Concerning the migration of the Gauls into Italy we are told as follows: While Tarquinius Priscus reigned at Rome, the Celts, who make up one of the three divisions of Gaul, were under the domination of the Bituriges, and this tribe supplied the Celtic nation with a king. Ambigatus was then the man, and his talents, together with his own and the general good fortune, had brought him great distinction; for Gaul under his sway grew so rich in corn and so populous, that it seemed hardly possible to govern so great a multitude. The king, who was now an old man and wished to relieve his kingdom of a burdensome throng, announced that he meant to send Bellovesus and Segovesus, his sister's sons, two enterprising young men, to find such homes as the gods might assign to them by augury; and promised them that they should head as large a number of emigrants as they themselves desired, so that no tribe might be able to prevent their settlement. Whereupon to Segovesus were by lot assigned the Hercynian highlands¹; but to Bello-

A.U.C.
363

Belloveso haud paulo laetiores in Italiam viam di-
5 dabant. Is quod eius ex populis abundabat, Bituriges Arvernos Senones Haeduos¹ Ambarros Carnutes Au-lercos excivit. Profectus ingentibus peditum equi-tumque copiis in Tricastinos² venit.

6 Alpes inde oppositae erant; quas inexcuperabiles visas haud equidem miror nulladum via, quod quidem continens memoria sit, nisi de Hercule fabulis credere 7 libet, superatas. Ibi cum velut saeptos montium altitudo teneret Gallos circumspectarentque quam per iuncta caelo iuga in alium orbem terrarum transirent, religio etiam tenuit quod allatum est advenas quae-8 rentes agrum ab Saluum gente oppugnari. Massi-lienses erant ii, navibus a Phocaea profecti. Id Galli fortunae suae omen rati adiuvare ut quem primum in terram egressi occupaverant locum patientibus Saluis³ communirent. Ipsi per Taurinos saltus saltumque 9 Duriae Alpes⁴ transcenderunt; fusisque acie Tuscis haud procul Ticino flumine, cum in quo consederant
agrum Insubrium appellari audissent, cognominem Insubribus, pago Haeduum, ibi omen sequentes loci condidere urbem; Mediolanium appellantur.

XXXV. Alia subinde manus Cenomanorum⁵ Eti-

¹ Haeduos H. J. Mueller: aeduos Ω.

² Tricastinos γ (cf. XXI. xxxi. 9): tricaspinos Ω: triscaspinos D.

³ patientibus Saluis Valesius: patientibus (petentibus B) siluis Ω.

⁴ saltumque Duriae Alpes Conway: saltusque iuriae alpes II: saltusque iuliae alpis (alpes M¹ or M²A²) Ω: saltusque (or quae) iuliae alte (alta U) alpis (alpes F²) PE?FBU.

⁵ Cenomanorum Glareanus: germanorum Ω.

¹ Tribes in central Gaul some of whose names survive in the modern Bourges, Auvergne, Sens, and Chartres. The Tricastini were in the Roman province (Provence).

vesus the gods proposed a far pleasanter road, into B.C. 391
Italy. Taking out with him the surplus population of his tribes, the Bituriges, Arverni, Senones, Haedui, Ambarri, Carnutes, and Aulerci, he marched with vast numbers of infantry and cavalry into the country of the Tricastini.¹

There the Alps stood over against them ; and I for one do not wonder that they seemed insuperable, for as yet no road had led across them—as far back at all events as tradition reaches—unless one chooses to believe the stories about Hercules. While they were there fenced in as it were by the lofty mountains, and were looking about to discover where they might cross, over heights that reached the sky, into another world, superstition also held them back, because it had been reported to them that some strangers seeking lands were beset by the Salui. These were the Massilians, who had come in ships from Phocaea. The Gauls, regarding this as a good omen of their own success, lent them assistance, so that they fortified, without opposition from the Salui, the spot which they had first seized after landing. They themselves crossed the Alps through the Taurine passes and the pass of the Duria ; routed the Etruscans in battle not far from the river Ticinus, and learning that they were encamped in what was called the country of the Insubres, who bore the same name as an Haeduan canton, they regarded it as a place of good omen, and founded a city there which they called Mediolanium.²

XXXV. Presently another band, consisting of Cenomani led by Etitovius, followed in the tracks

² Now Milan.

- 2 tovio duce vestigia priorum secuta eodem saltu
 favente Belloveso cum transcendisset Alpes, ubi nunc Brixia ac Verona urbes sunt locos tenuere. Libui considunt post hos Salluvii¹ prope antiquam gentem Laevos Ligures incolentes circa Ticinum annuem. Poenino deinde² Boii Lingonesque trans-gressi cum iam inter Padum atque Alpes omnia tenerentur, Pado ratibus traiecto non Etruscos modo
 sed etiam Umbros agro pellunt; intra Appenninum 3 tamen sese tenuere. Tum Senones, recentissimi advenarum, ab Utente flumine usque ad Aesim fines habuere. Hanc gentem Clusium Romamque inde venisse comperio: id parum certum est, solamne an ab omnibus Cisalpinorum Gallorum populis adiutam.
 4 Clusini novo bello exterriti cum multitudinem, cum formas hominum invisitatas cernerent et genus armorum, audirentque saepe ab iis cis Padum ultraque legiones Etruscorum fusas, quamquam ad-versus Romanos nullum eis ius societatis amicitiaeve erat, nisi quod Veientes consanguineos adversus populum Romanum non defendissent, legatos Ro-5 mam qui auxilium ab senatu peterent, misere. De auxilio nihil impetratum; legati tres M. Fabi Am-busti filii missi, qui senatus populi³ Romani nomine agerent cum Gallis ne a quibus nullam
 iniuriam acceperant socios populi Romani atque
 6 amicos oppugnarent. Romanis eos bello quoque, si

¹ Salluvii¹ Madvig: salluii (or salluii or saluuii) qui Ω.

² poenino deinde *E*³ζ: poeni nonne inde M: poeninon deinde Vorm. *M*² (or *M*¹) *UO*¹*E*¹*H*: paeni non deinde PL:
 peninon deinde FBA: poeninen deinde O: poenis non deinde E: pene noti *D*³ (over erasure).

³ populi¹ *A*¹ (or *A*²) ζ Ald.: populi Ω.

of the earlier emigrants; and having, with the approval of Bellovesus, crossed the Alps by the same pass, established themselves where the cities of Brixia and Verona are now. After these the Libui came and settled, and the Salluvii—taking up their abode hard by the ancient tribe of the Laevi Ligures, about the river Ticinus. Then, over the Poenine Pass, came the Boii and Lingones, who finding everything taken up between the Po and the Alps, crossed the Po on rafts, and drove out not only the Etruscans, but also the Umbrians from their lands; nevertheless, they kept on the further side of the Apennines. Then the Senones, the latest to come, had their holdings from the river Utens all the way to the Aesis. This was the tribe, I find, which came to Clusium and from thence to Rome, but whether alone or assisted by all the peoples of Cisalpine Gaul, is uncertain.

¶ The men of Clusium, alarmed by this strange invasion, when they beheld the numbers and the unfamiliar figures of the men and their novel weapons, and heard that on many a field, this side the Po and beyond it, they had put to flight the levies of Etruria; though they had no rights of alliance or of friendship with the Romans, except that they had refused to defend their kinsmen the Veientes against the Roman People; did yet dispatch envoys to Rome to ask help of the senate. As for the help, they were unsuccessful; but the three sons of Marcus Fabius Ambustus were sent as ambassadors to remonstrate with the Gauls, in the name of the senate and the Roman People, against their attack on those who had done them no wrong, and were the Roman People's allies and friends. The Romans, res cogat, tuendos esse ; sed melius visum bellum ipsum amoveri, si posset, et Gallos, novam gentem, pace potius cognosci quam armis.

A.U.C.
363

A.U.C.
364

XXXVI. Mitis legatio, ni praeferoces legatos Gallisque magis quam Romanis similes habuisset. Quibus postquam mandata ediderunt in concilio
 2 Gallorum datur responsum : etsi novum nomen audiant Romanorum, tamen credere viros fortes esse, quorum auxilium a Clusinis in re trepida sit implorat-
 3 tum ; et quoniam legatione adversus se maluerint quam armis tueri socios, ne se quidem pacem quam illi adferant aspernari, si Gallis egentibus agro, quem latius possideant quam colant Clusini, partem finium
 4 concedant ; aliter pacem impetrari non posse. Et responsum coram Romanis accipere velle, et si negetur ager coram iisdem Romanis dimicatu-
 5 ros mortales praestarent. Quodnam id ius esset agrum a possessoribus petere aut minari arma Romanis quaerentibus et quid in Etruria rei Gallis esset, cum illi se in armis ius ferre et omnia fortium virorum esse ferociter dicerent, accensis utrimque

they said, would be obliged to defend them, even B.C. 391 going to war, if circumstances should make it necessary; but it had seemed preferable that the war itself should, if possible, be accommodated, and that they should make the acquaintance of the Gauls—a new race to them—in a friendly rather than in a hostile manner.

XXXVI. It was a peaceful embassy, had it not B.C. 390 been for the violence of the ambassadors, who were more like Gauls than Romans. To them, when they had made known their mission in the council, the Gauls replied, that although they then heard for the first time the name of Roman, they could yet believe them to be stout-hearted men, since the Clusini had sought their aid in time of danger; and inasmuch as they had chosen to defend their allies by negotiation rather than by the sword, they would not, for their own part, spurn the peace which the Romans proposed, if the men of Clusium, who possessed more land than they could till, would surrender to the Gauls, who needed land, a portion of their territory; on no other terms could they consider granting peace. They added that they desired to be answered in the presence of the Romans, and that if land were refused them, it was under the eyes of these same Romans that they meant to fight, that they might be able to tell their friends how greatly the Gauls excelled all other men in prowess. When the Romans asked what conceivable right they had to demand land of its occupants under threat of war, and what business Gauls had in Etruria, they were truculently informed, that the new-comers carried their right at the point of the sword and that all things belonged to the brave. So, angry passions animis ad arma discurritur et proelium conseritur.

 6 Ibi iam urgentibus Romanam urbem fatis legati contra ius gentium arma capiunt. Nec id clam esse potuit cum ante signa Etruscorum tres nobilissimi fortissimique Romanae iuventutis pugnarent; tantum 7 eminebat peregrina virtus. Quin etiam Q. Fabius evectus extra aciem equo ducem Gallorum ferociter in ipsa signa Etruscorum incursantem per latus transfixum hasta occidit; spoliaque eius legentem
 Galli agnovere, perque totam aciem Romanum lega-8 tum esse signum datum est. Omissa inde in Clusinos ira receptui canunt minantes Romanis. Erant qui extemplo Romam eundum censerent; vicere seniores ut legati prius mitterentur questum iniurias postulatumque ut pro iure gentium violato Fabii dede-9 rentur. Legati Gallorum cum ea, sicut erant mandata, exposuissent, senatui nec factum placebat Fabiorum et ius postulare barbari videbantur; sed
 ne id quod placebat decerneretur in tantae nobilita-10 tis viris ambitio obstabat. Itaque ne penes ipsos culpa esset cladis forte Gallico bello acceptae, cognitionem
 de postulatis Gallorum ad populum reiciunt; ubi tanto plus gratia atque opes valuere ut quorum de poena agebatur tribuni militum consulari potestate

being kindled on both sides, they ran to their weapons and joined battle; and the envoys, impelled by the fate which was even then urging Rome to its doom, took up arms, in defiance of the law of nations. Nor could it pass unnoticed, when in the very fore-front of the Tuscan line there were fighting three of the noblest and most valiant of the Roman youth, so conspicuous was the strangers' bravery. Nay, Quintus Fabius even rode out in front of the line, and meeting the Gallic leader as he charged boldly at the very standards of the Etruscans, ran his spear through his side and killed him. As he was engaged in despoiling his man, the Gauls recognized him, and the word passed through all the army that it was the Roman envoy. Thereupon, they gave over their anger at the Clusini and sounded the retreat, uttering threats against the Romans. Some were for marching at once on Rome; but the older men brought them over to send envoys first to complain of their wrongs, and to demand the surrender of the Fabii, in satisfaction for their violation of the law of nations. When the Gallic emissaries had stated their mission according to instructions, the senate disapproved of the conduct of the Fabii and felt the demands of the barbarians to be just; but private interest could not suffer them, in the case of men of such exalted station, to decree what they approved. And so, that the blame might not rest with the senate, if a Gallic war should chance to bring disaster, they referred the demands of the Gauls to the people for consideration; and with them wealth and influence carried so much more weight, that the men whose punishment was under discussion were elected consular tribunes for

A.U.C. 11 in insequentem annum crearentur. Quo facto haud 364 secus quam dignum erat infensi Galli bellum propalam minantes ad suos redeunt. Tribuni militum cum tribus Fabiis creati Q. Sulpicius Longus Q. Servilius quartum P. Cornelius¹ Maluginensis.

XXXVII. Cum tanta moles mali instaret—adeo obcaecat animos fortuna ubi vim suam ingruentem refringi non volt—civitas quae adversus Fidenatem ac Veientem hostem aliosque finitimos populos ultima experiens auxilia dictatorem multis tempestati-
 2 bus dixisset, ea tunc invisitato atque inaudito hoste ab Oceano terrarumque ultimis oris bellum ciente, nihil extraordinarii imperii aut auxilii quaesivit.
 3 Tribuni quorum temeritate bellum contractum erat summae rerum praeerant, dilectumque nihilo accuratorem quam ad media bella haberi solitus erat,
 4 extenuantes etiam famam belli, habebant. Interim Galli postquam acceperere ultro honorem habitum violatoribus iuris humani elusamque legationem suam esse, flagrantem ira, cuius impotens est gens, confestim signis convolsis citato agmine iter ingredi-
 5 untur. Ad quorum praetereuntium raptum tumultum cum exterritae urbes ad arma concurrerent fugaque agrestium fieret, Romam se ire magno clamore significabant quacumque ibant, equis virisque longe ac
 6 late fuso agmine immensum obtinentes loci. Sed antecedente fama nuntiisque Clusinorum, deinceps

¹ P. Cornelius H. J. Mueller (cf. Diod. xv. xx. 1): p. servilius (omitted by H) Ω .

¹ According to Dionysius of Halicarnassus (XII. xix) four legions were embodied, and so many allies and auxiliary troops that at the Allia the Roman army numbered 40,000 (cf. Plut. Cam. XVIII).

the ensuing year. At this the Gauls were enraged, B.C. 390 as they had every right to be, and returned to their people with open threats of war. The tribunes of the soldiers chosen with the three Fabii were Quintus Sulpicius Longus, Quintus Servilius (for his fourth term), and Publius Cornelius Maluginensis.

XXXVII. Now that so heavy a calamity drew towards,—such is the blindness Fortune visits on men's minds when she would have her gathering might meet with no check,—that state which against the Fidenates and Veientes and other neighbouring tribes had on many occasions resorted to the last expedient and named a dictator—that state, I say, though now an enemy never yet seen or heard of was rousing up war from the ocean and the remotest corners of the world, had recourse to no unusual authority or help. The tribunes whose rashness had brought on the war were in supreme command; they conducted the levy with no greater care than had usually been employed in preparing for ordinary campaigns,¹ and even disparaged the rumoured seriousness of the danger. The Gauls, meanwhile, on learning that honours had actually been conferred on men who had violated the rights of mankind and insulted their embassy, were consumed with wrath (a passion which their race is powerless to control), and straightway catching up their standards, set their column in rapid motion. As they marched swiftly and noisily on, the terrified cities armed in haste, and the peasants fled; but they signified with loud cries, wherever they came, that Rome was their goal, and their horse and foot in an extended line covered a vast tract of ground. Yet, though rumour and the report of the Clusini preceded them, and

inde aliorum populorum, plurimum terroris Romam
 7 celeritas hostium tulit, quippe quibus velut tumultuario exercitu raptim ducto aegre ad undecimum lapidem occursum est, qua flumen Allia Crustuminiis montibus praecalto defluens alveo haud multum infra
 8 viam Tiberino amni miscetur. Iam omnia contra circaque hostium plena erant, et nata in vanos tumultus gens truci cantu clamoribusque variis horrendo cuncta compleverant sono.

XXXVIII. Ibi tribuni militum non loco castris ante capto, non praemunito vallo quo receptus esset, non deorum saltem, si non hominum memores, nec auspicato nec litato, instruunt aciem diductam in cornua, ne circumveniri multitudine hostium pos-
 2 sent; nec tamen aequari frontes poterant cum extenuando infirmam et vix cohaerentem mediam aciem haberent. Paulum erat ab dextera editi loci, quem subsidiariis repleti placuit; eaque res ut initium
 3 pavoris ac fugae, sic una salus fugientibus fuit. Nam Brennus regulus Gallorum in paucitate hostium artem maxime timens, ratus ad id captum superiorem locum ut ubi Galli cum acie legionum recta fronte concucurrissent subsidia in aversos transversosque
 4 impetum darent, ad subsidiarios signa convertit, si eos

¹ The exact position of the battlefield is uncertain, as the town Crustumerium has disappeared and left no trace. A brook called Fosso Macstro, which empties into the Tiber about eleven miles from Rome, has been thought to be the ancient Allia.

after that successive messages from other peoples, B.C. 390
 the utmost consternation was wrought in Rome by the enemy's swiftness, which was such that the army, albeit levied as it were en masse and hurriedly led out, barely covered eleven miles before confronting him, at the point where the river Allia descends in a very deep channel from the Crustumian mountains, and mingles, not far south of the highway, with the waters of the Tiber.¹ The Gauls had already overrun all the ground in front and on both sides, and—the race being naturally given to vainglorious outbursts—their wild songs and discordant shouts filled all the air with a hideous noise.

XXXVIII. There the tribunes of the soldiers, without having selected a place for a camp or fortified a position to which they might retreat, and, forgetting even the gods, to say nothing of men, without auspices or sacrificial omens, drew up their line with the wings extended to prevent being outflanked by the numbers of the enemy; yet could not stretch their front as wide as his, though they thinned it till the centre was weak and scarce held together. There was a little eminence on the right which they decided to occupy with their reserves, a measure which, though it was the beginning of their panic and flight, was also the sole salvation of the fugitives. For Brennus, the Gallic chieftain, seeing the Romans to be so few, was especially apprehensive of a stratagem. He supposed that they had seized the higher ground for this purpose, that when the Gauls had made a frontal attack on the battle-line of the legions, the reserves might assail them in the flank and rear. He therefore directed his assault against the reserves, not doubting that, if he could loco depulisset haud dubius facilem in aequo campi

A.U.C.
364

 tantum superanti multitudini victoriam fore ; adeo
 non fortuna modo sed ratio etiam cum barbaris 5 stabat. In altera acie nihil simile Romanis, non apud duces, non apud milites erat. Pavor fugaque occupaverat animos et tanta omnium¹ oblivio ut multo maior pars Veios in hostium urbem, cum Tiberis arceret, quam recto itinere Romam ad
 6 coniuges ac liberos fugerent. Parumper subsidiarios tutatus est locus ; in reliqua acie simul est clamor proximis ab latere, ultimis ab tergo auditus, ignotum hostem prius paene quam viderent, non modo non temptato certamine sed ne clamore quidem reddito, 7 integri intactique fugerunt ; nec ulla caedes pugnantium fuit ; terga caesa suomet ipsorum certamine 8 in turba impredientium fugam. Circa ripam Tiberis, quo armis abiectis totum sinistrum cornu defugit,
 magna strages facta est, multosque imperitos nandi aut invalidos, graves loriceis aliisque tegminibus, hau-9 sere gurgites ; maxima tamen pars incolumis Veios perfugit, unde non modo praesidii quicquam sed ne 10 nuntius quidem cladis Romam est missus. Ab dextro cornu, quod procul a flumine et magis sub monte steterat, Romam omnes petiere et ne clausis quidem portis urbis in arcem confugerunt.

¹ omnium Gronovius D?: hominum Ω

dislodge them, it would be easy for his greatly B C. 390
superior numbers to obtain a victory in the plain. Thus not only luck but generalship as well were on the side of the barbarians. In the other army there was no resemblance to Romans, either amongst officers or private soldiers. Terror and dismay had got hold of their spirits, and such complete forgetfulness of everything that a much greater number fled to Veii, a hostile city, though the Tiber was across their way, than by the straight road to Rome, to their wives and children. For a little while the reserves were protected by their position. In the rest of the field, no sooner had those who were nearest heard the shouting on their flank, and those who were farthest the outcry in their rear, than—fresh and unhurt—they ran away from their strange enemies, almost before they had caught sight of them; and so far were they from risking a combat, that they did not even return their battle-cry. None were slain in fight; but they were cut down from behind as they blocked their escape by their own struggles in the disordered rout. On the bank of the Tiber, whither the whole left wing had fled, after throwing away their arms, there was great slaughter, and many who could not swim, or lacked the strength, weighed down by their corslets and other armour, sank beneath the flood. Nevertheless, the chief part got safely to Veii, whence they not only sent no succours to Rome, but dispatched not even a messenger to tell of the defeat. From the right wing, which had stood at a distance from the river and closer to the foot of the mountain, the fugitives all made for Rome, and without stopping even to shut the city gates, sought refuge in the Citadel.

XXXIX. Gallos quoque velut obstupefactos miraculum victoriae tam repentinae tenuit, et ipsi pavore defixi primum steterunt, velut ignari quid accidisset; deinde insidias vereri; postremo caesorum spolia legere armorumque cumulos, ut mos eis est, coacervare; tum demum postquam nihil usquam hostile cernebatur viam ingressi, haud multo ante solis occasum ad urbem Romam perveniunt. Ubi cum praegressi equites non portas clausas, non stationem pro portis excubare, non armatos esse in muris rettulissent, aliud priori simile miraculum eos sustinuit; noctemque veriti et ignotae situm urbis inter Romam atque Anienem consedere exploratoribus missis circa moenia aliasque portas quaenam hostibus in perdita re consilia essent. Romani cum pars maior ex acie Veios petisset quam Romam, nemo superesse quemquam praeter eos qui Romam refugerant crederet,¹ complorati omnes pariter vivi mortuique totam prope urbem lamentis impleverunt. Privatos deinde luctus stupefecit publicus pavor, postquam hostes adesse nuntiatum est; mox ululatus cantusque dissonos vagantibus circa moenia turmatim barbaris audiebant.

6 Omne inde tempus suspensos ita tenuit animos usque ad lucem alteram ut identidem iam in urbem futurus videretur impetus: primo adventu, quia

¹ crederet F³A¹5: crederent Ω.

XXXIX. The very Gauls themselves, stunned by B.C. 390 the marvellous victory they had so suddenly gained, at first stood rooted to the spot with amazement, like men that knew not what had happened; then they feared an ambush; after that they fell to collecting the spoils of the slain and erecting piles of arms, as their custom is; then at last having discovered no hostile movement anywhere, they began their march, and a little before sunset reached the environs of Rome. There, when the cavalry had reconnoitred and had reported that the gates were not closed, that no out-guards were watching before the gates, that no armed men were on the walls, astonishment held them spell-bound as before; and fearful of the night and the lie of the unknown City, they went into camp between Rome and the Anio, after sending off patrols about the walls and the rest of the gates, to find out what the enemy in their desperate case could possibly be at. As for the Romans, inasmuch as more, on escaping from the battle, had fled to Veii than to Rome, and no one supposed that any were left alive except those who had found refuge in the City, they mourned for all alike, both the living and the dead, and well nigh filled the City with lamentation. But presently their personal griefs were overwhelmed in a general panic, with the announcement that the enemy was at hand; and soon they could hear the dissonant howls and songs of the barbarians, as their squadrons roamed about the walls. During all the time that intervened before the following morning their hearts were in such suspense, that each moment they anticipated an immediate attack: on the first arrival of the enemy, because they had come close to the accesserant ad urbem—mansuros enim ad Alliam 7 fuisse nisi hoc consilii foret;—deinde sub occasum solis, quia haud multum diei supererat, ante noctem rati sunt¹ invasuros; tum in noctem dilatum con-8 silium esse, quo plus pavoris inferrent. Postremo lux appropinquans exanimare, timorique perpetuo ipsum malum continens fuit cum signa infesta portis sunt inlata. Nequaquam tamen ea nocte neque insequenti die similis illi quae ad Alliam tam pavidè 9 fugerat civitas fuit. Nam cum defendi urbem posse tam parva relictà manu spes nulla esset, placuit cum coniugibus ac liberis iuventutem militarem senatusque robur in arcem Capitoliumque concedere, 10 armisque et frumento conlato inde ex loco munito²

 deos hominesque et Romanum nomen defendere; 11 flaminem sacerdotesque Vestales sacra publica a caede, ab incendiis procul auferre, nec ante deseri cultum eorum quam non superessent qui colerent.
 12 Si arx Capitoliumque, sedes deorum, si senatus, caput publici consilii, si militaris iuventus superfuerit imminenti ruinae urbis, facilem iacturam esse seniorum 13 relictarum in urbe utique periturae turbae. Et quo id aequiore animo de plebe multitudo ferret, senes triumphales consularesque simul se cum illis palam
 dicere obituros nec his corporibus quibus non arma

¹ rati sunt Walters (Class. Quart. V (1911) p. 14): rati (ratu B) se Ω : rati V: enim Walters (Oxford Text).

² inde ex loco munito Reid: ex loco inde munito Ω .

City—for they would have stopped at the Allia, had B.C. 390
 this not been their design;—again, towards sundown, because there was little daylight left, they thought that they would enter the City before nightfall; then they concluded that they had put it off till night, to strike more fear into them. Finally the approach of dawn put them beside themselves, and close upon these restless apprehensions came the evil they were dreading, when the hostile forces entered the city gates. Yet neither that night nor the following day did the citizens at all resemble those who had fled in such consternation at the Allia. For having no hopes that they could protect the City with so small a force as remained to them, they resolved that the men of military age and the able-bodied senators should retire into the Citadel and the Capitol, with their wives and children; and, having laid in arms and provisions, should from that stronghold defend the gods, the men, and the name of Rome; that the flamen and the priestesses of Vesta should remove the sacred objects pertaining to the State far from the bloodshed and the flames, nor should their cult be abandoned till none should be left to cherish it. If the Citadel and the Capitol, where dwelt the gods; if the senate, the source of public wisdom; if the young men capable of bearing arms survived the impending destruction of the City, they could easily bear to lose the crowd of old men left behind them, who were bound to die in any case. And in order that the multitude of commoners might endure it with the more composure, the old men who had triumphed and those who had been consuls declared publicly that they would perish with those others, nor burden with bodies ferre, non tueri patriam possent, oneratueros inopiam armatorum.

XL. Haec inter seniores morti destinatos iactata solacia. Versae inde adhortationes ad agmen iuvenum quos in Capitolium atque in arcem prosequerantur, commendantes virtuti eorum iuventaeque urbis per trecentos sexaginta annos omnibus bellis
 2 victricis quaecumque reliqua esset fortuna. Digredientibus qui spem omnem atque opem secum ferebant ab iis qui captae urbis non superesse statuerant
 3 exitio cum ipsa res speciesque miserabilis erat, tum muliebris fletus et concursatio incerta nunc hos nunc illos sequentium rogitantiumque viros natosque cui se fato darent, nihil quod humani superesset mali¹
 4 relinquebant. Magna pars tamen earum in arcem suos persecutae sunt nec prohibente ullo nec vocante, quia quod utile obsessis ad minuendam imbellem
 5 multitudinem id parum humanum erat. Alia maxime plebis turba, quam nec capere tam exiguus collis nec alere in tanta inopia frumenti poterat, ex urbe effusa
 6 velut agmine iam uno petiit Ianiculum. Inde pars per agros dilapsi, pars urbes petunt finitimas, sine ullo duce aut consensu suam quisque spem, sua consilia communibus deploratis sequentes.²

7 Flamen interim Quirinalis virginesque Vestales

¹ humani superesset mali Finckh: humanis superesset malis Ω.

² sequentes Madvig: exsequentes (exe- B) Ω.

incapable of bearing arms in defence of the country B.C. 390
the scanty stores of the fighting men.

XL. Such were the consolations which the old men appointed to die exchanged among themselves; then, directing their encouragement to the band of youths whom they were escorting to the Capitol and the Citadel, they committed to their valour and their young strength whatever fortune might yet be in store for a City that for three hundred and sixty years had been victorious in every war. On the departure of those who carried with them all hope and help, from those who had resolved not to survive the capture and destruction of their City, though the separation was a pitiful thing to see, yet the tears of the women, as they ran distractedly up and down, and following now these, now those, demanded of husbands and sons to what fate they were consigning them, supplied the final touch of human wretchedness. Still, the greater part of them followed their sons into the Citadel, though none either forbade or encouraged it, since what would have helped the besieged to lessen the number of non-combatants would have been inhuman. Another host—consisting chiefly of plebeians—too large for so small a hill to receive, or to support with so meagre a supply of corn, streamed out of the City as though forming at last one continuous line, and took their way towards Janiculum. Thence some of them scattered through the country-side, and others made for the towns near by. They had neither leader nor concerted plan; each followed the promptings of his own hopes and his own counsels, in despair of the commonwealth.

Meanwhile the flamen of Quirinus and the Vestal

omissa rerum suarum cura, quae sacrorum secum ferenda, quae quia vires ad omnia ferenda deerant relinquenda essent consultantes, quisve ea locus fidei
 8 adservaturus custodia esset, optimum ducunt condita in doliolis sacello proximo aedibus flaminis Quirinalis, ubi nunc despui religio est, defodere; cetera inter se onere partito ferunt¹ via quae sublicio ponte ducit
 9 ad Ianiculum. In eo clivo eas cum L. Albinus de plebe homo conspexisset plaustro conjugem ac liberos avehens² inter ceteram turbam quae inutilis bello
 10 urbe excedebat salvo etiam tum discrimine divinarum humanarumque rerum religiosum ratus sacerdotes publicas sacraque populi Romani pedibus ire ferrique ac suos in vehiculo conspici, descendere uxorem ac pueros iussit, virgines sacraque in plastrum imposuit et Caere, quo iter sacerdotibus erat, pervexit.

XLI. Romae interim satis iam omnibus, ut in tali re, ad tuendam arcem compositis turba seniorum domos regressi adventum hostium obstinato ad
 2 mortem animo expectabant. Qui eorum curules gesserant magistratus, ut in fortunae pristinae honorumque ac virtutis insignibus morerentur, quae augustissima vestis est tensas ducentibus triumphantibusve, ea vestiti medio aedium eburneis sellis

¹ ferunt ζ: feruntur Ω.

² avehens Madvig: uehens ζ: habens Ω.

¹ Cars used in the games of the Circus to carry the images of the Gods.

² The curule chair was inlaid with ivory. At this period the only curule magistrates were dictators, masters of the horse, consuls, and censors.

virgins, with no thought for their own belongings, B.C. 390 were consulting which of the sacred things they should carry with them, and which, because they were not strong enough to carry them all, they must leave behind, and, finally, where these objects would be safe. They judged it best to place them in jars and bury them in the shrine adjoining the flamen's house, where it is now forbidden to spit; the rest of the things they carried, sharing the burden amongst them, along the road which leads by the Sublician Bridge to Janiculum. As they mounted the hill they were perceived by a plebeian named Lucius Albinus, who had a waggon in which he was conveying his wife and children, amidst the throng of those who, unfit for war, were leaving the City. Preserving even then the distinction between divine and human, and holding it sacrilege that the priestesses of his country should go afoot, bearing the sacred objects of the Roman People, while his family were seen in a vehicle, he commanded his wife and children to get down, placed the virgins and their relics in the waggon, and brought them to Caere, whither the priestesses were bound.

XLI. At Rome meantime such arrangements for defending the Citadel as the case admitted of were now fairly complete, and the old men returned to their homes to await the coming of their enemies with hearts that were steeled to die. Such of them as had held curule magistracies, that they might face death in the trappings of their ancient rank and office, as becomen their worth, put on the stately robes which are worn by those who conduct the *tensae*¹ or celebrate a triumph, and, thus habited, seated themselves on ivory chairs² in the middle of

- 3 sedere. Sunt qui M. Folio pontifice maximo praefante carmen devovisse eos se pro patria Quiritibusque Romanis tradant.
- 4 Galli et quia interposita nocte a contentione pug-nae remiserant animos et quod nec in acie ancipiti usquam certaverant proelio nec tum impetu aut vi capiebant urbem, sine ira, sine ardore animorum ingressi postero die urbem patente Collina porta in forum perveniunt, circumferentes oculos ad templa 5 deum arcemque solam belli speciem tenentem. Inde modico relicto praesidio ne quis in dissipatos ex
arce aut Capitolio impetus fieret, dilapsi ad praedam vacuis occursum hominum viis pars in proxima quae-que tectorum agmine ruunt, pars ultima, velut ea 6 demum intacta et referta praeda, petunt. Inde rursus ipsa solitudine absterriti, ne qua fraus hostilis vagos exciperet, in forum ac propinqua foro loca 7 conglobati redibant¹; ubi eos, plebis aedificiis ob-seratis, patentibus atriis principum, maior prope
cunctatio tenebat aperta quam clausa invadendi; 8 adeo haud secus quam venerabundi intuebantur in aedium vestibulis sedentes viros praeter ornatum habitumque humano augustiorem maiestate etiam quam voltus gravitasque oris prae se ferebat simillimos dis.

¹ redibant F^3 (or F^2) $D^3 A^2$: rediebant Ω .

their houses. Some historians record that Marcus B.C. 390 Folius, the pontifex maximus, led in the recitation of a solemn vow, by which they devoted themselves to death, in behalf of their country and the Roman Quirites.

The Gauls found their lust for combat cooled by the night which had intervened. At no point in the battle had they been pushed to desperate exertions, nor had they now to carry the City by assault. It was therefore without rancour or excitement that they entered Rome, on the following day, by the Colline Gate (which lay wide open), and made their way to the Forum, gazing about them at the temples of the gods and at the Citadel, which alone presented some show of war. Thence, after leaving a moderate guard to prevent any attack upon their scattered forces from Citadel or Capitol, they dispersed in quest of booty through streets where there was none to meet them, some rushing in a body into whatever houses were nearest, while others sought out the most remote, as though supposing that only such would be intact and full of plunder. But being frightened out of these by their very solitude, lest the enemy should by some ruse entrap them as they wandered apart, they came trooping back to the Forum and the places near it. There they found the dwellings of the plebeians fastened up, but the halls of the nobles open; and they hesitated almost more to enter the open houses than the shut,—so nearly akin to religious awe was their feeling as they beheld seated in the vestibules, beings who, besides that their ornaments and apparel were more splendid than belonged to man, seemed also, in their majesty of countenance and in the gravity of their expression, most like to gods.

A.U.C.
364

9 Ad eos velut simulacra versi cum starent, M. Papirius, unus ex iis, dicitur Gallo barbam suam, ut tum omnibus promissa erat, permulcenti scipione eburneo in caput incusso iram movisse atque ab eo initium caedis ortum, ceteros in sedibus suis truci-10 datos; post principum caedem nulli deinde mortalium parci, diripi tecta, exhaustis inici ignes.

XLII. Ceterum, seu non omnibus delendi urbem libido erat, seu ita placuerat principibus Gallorum et ostentari quaedam incendia terroris causa, si compelli ad deditionem caritate sedum suarum
2 obsessi possent, et non omnia concremari tecta ut quodcumque superesset urbis, id pignus ad flectendos hostium animos haberent, nequaquam perinde atque in capta urbe primo¹ die aut passim aut late vagatus
3 est ignis. Romani ex arce plenam hostium urbem cernentes vagosque per vias omnes cursus, cum alia atque alia parte nova aliqua clades oreretur, non mentibus solum consipere,² sed ne auribus quidem
4 atque oculis satis constare poterant. Quocumque clamor hostium,³ mulierum puerorumque ploratus, sonitus flammae et fragor ruentium tectorum aver- tisset, paventes ad omnia animos oraque et oculos flectebant velut ad spectaculum a fortuna positi

¹ primo H. J. Mueller: prima Ω .

² consipere Lipsius: concipere Ω : incipere E.

³ clamor hostium *A*² (or *A*³) ζ : clamor sonitus hostium Ω .

BOOK V. XLII. 9—XLIII. 4

While they stood reverentially before them, as B.C. 390 if they had been images, it is related that a Gaul stroked the beard of one of them, Marcus Papirius,—which he wore long, as they all did then,—whereat the Roman struck him over the head with his ivory mace, and, provoking his anger, was the first to be slain; after that the rest were massacred where they sat; and when the nobles had been murdered, there was no mercy then shown to anyone; the houses were ransacked, and after being emptied were given to the flames.

XLII. But whether it was that not all the Gauls desired to destroy the City, or that their leaders had resolved to make a certain show of burning, to inspire alarm, in hopes that the besieged might be driven to capitulate by affection for their homes, but not to burn up all the houses, in order that they might hold whatever remained of the City as a pledge to work on the feelings of their enemies—however this may have been, the fire spread by no means so freely or extensively on the first day as is commonly the case in a captured town. As the Romans looked down from their fastness and saw the City full of enemies running up and down in all the streets, while first in one quarter and then in another some new calamity would be occurring, they were unable, I do not say to keep their heads, but even to be sure of their ears and eyes. Wherever the shouting of the invaders, the lamentations of the women and children, the crackling of the flames, and the crash of falling buildings drew their attention, trembling at each sound, they turned their thoughts and their gaze that way, as though Fortune had placed them there to witness the 364.

A.U.C

occidentis patriae nec ullius rerum suarum relict 5 praeterquam corporum vindices, tanto ante alios miserandi magis qui unquam obsessi sunt quod interclusi a patria obsidebantur, omnia sua cernentes 6 in hostium potestate. Nec tranquillior nox diem tam foede actum excepit; lux deinde noctem inquieta¹
 insecuta est, nec ullum erat tempus quod a novae 7 semper cladis alicuius spectaculo cessaret. Nihil tamen tot onerati atque obruti malis flexerunt animos quin, etsi omnia flammis ac ruinis aequata vidissent, quamvis inopem parvumque quem tenebant collem libertati relictum virtute defenderent;
 8 et iam cum eadem cottidie acciderent, velut adsueta
 malis abalienaverant ab sensu rerum suarum animos, arma tantum ferrumque in dextris velut solas reliquias spei suae intuentes.

XLIII. Galli quoque per aliquot dies in tecta modo urbis nequiquam bello gesto cum inter incendia ac ruinas captae urbis nihil superesse praeter armatos hostes viderent nec quicquam tot cladibus territos nec flexuros ad deditionem animos ni vis adhiberetur, experiri ultima et impetum facere in 2 arcem statuunt. Prima luce signo dato multitudo omnis in foro instruitur; inde clamore sublato ac testudine facta subeunt. Adversus quos Romani

¹ inquieta Gronovius: inquietam Q.

pageant of their dying country. Of all their possessions nothing was left them to defend save their persons alone; and so much more wretched was their plight than that of all others who have ever been beleaguered, that they were cut off from their native City and confined where they could see all that belonged to them in the power of their enemies. Nor was the night more tranquil, after a day of such distress; and the night was followed by a restless day, with never a moment that had not still some fresh calamity to unfold. Yet, oppressed as they were, or rather overwhelmed, by so many misfortunes, nothing could alter their resolve; though they should see everything laid low in flames and ruins, they would stoutly defend the hill they held, however small and naked, which was all that Liberty had left. And now that the same events were occurring every day, like men grown used to grief, they had ceased to feel their own misfortunes, looking solely to their shields and the swords in their right hands as their only remaining hope.

XLIII. The Gauls likewise, having vainly for some days waged war against only the buildings of Rome, when they saw that there was nothing left amidst the smouldering ruins of the captured City but armed enemies, who for all their disasters were not a jot appalled nor likely to yield to anything but force, took a desperate resolution to attack the Citadel. At daybreak the signal was made; and the entire host, having formed up in the Forum, gave a cheer, and raising their shields above their heads and locking them, began the ascent. The defenders on the other hand did nothing rashly

nihil temere nec trepide ; ad omnis aditus stationibus firmatis, qua signa ferri videbant ea robore virorum opposito scandere hostem sinunt, quo successerit magis in arduum eo pelli posse per proclive facilius
 3 rati. Medio fere clivo resistere, atque inde ex loco superiore, qui prope sua sponte in hostem inferebat impetu facto, strage ea ac¹ ruina fudere Gallos ut nunquam postea nec pars nec universi temptaverint
 4 tale pugnae genus. Omissa itaque spe per vim atque arma subeundi obsidionem parant, cuius ad id tempus immemores et quod in urbe fuerat frumentum incendiis urbis absumpserant, et ex agris
 5 per eos ipsos dies raptum omne Veios erat. Igitur exercitu diviso partim per finitimos populos praedari placuit, partim obsideri arcem, ut obsidentibus frumentum populatores agrorum praeberent.
 6 Proficiscentis Gallos ab urbe ad Romanam experiendam virtutem fortuna ipsa Ardeam, ubi Camillus
 7 exsulabat, duxit ; qui maestior ibi fortuna publica quam sua cum dis hominibusque accusandis senesceret, indignando mirandoque ubi illi viri essent qui secum Veios Faleriosque cepissent, qui alia bella
 8 fortius semper quam felicius gessissent, repente audit Gallorum exercitum adventare atque de eo pavidos

¹ strage ea ac Madvig: strage ac Ω .

or in confusion. At all the approaches they had strengthened the guard-posts, and where they saw the enemy advancing they stationed their best soldiers, and suffered them to come up, persuaded that the higher they mounted up the steep the easier it would be to drive them down. They made their stand about the middle of the declivity, and there, launching their attack from the higher ground, which seemed of itself to hurl them against the foe, dislodged the Gauls, with such havoc and destruction that they never attempted to attack in that manner again, with either a part or the whole of their strength. So, relinquishing all hope of getting up by force of arms, they prepared for a blockade. Having never till that moment considered such a thing, they had destroyed all the corn in the City with their conflagrations, and what was in the fields had all been hurriedly carried off, within the last few days, to Veii. They therefore arranged to divide their army, and employ part of it to pillage the neighbouring nations and part to invest the Citadel, in order that those who held the lines might be provisioned by the foragers.

When the Gauls departed from the City, Fortune's own hand guided them to Ardea, that they might make trial of Roman manhood. Camillus was languishing there in exile, more grieved by the nation's calamity than by his own; and as he sorrowfully inveighed against gods and men, and asked, with wonder and humiliation, where those heroes were who had shared with him in the capture of Veii and Falerii, and whose gallantry in other wars had ever outrun their success, of a sudden he heard that the army of the Gauls was coming, and that the Ardeates

A.U.C.
364

Ardeates consultare. Nec secus quam divino spiritu tactus cum se in mediam contionem intulisset abstinere suetus ante talibus conciliis, (XLIV.) "Ardeates" inquit, "veteres amici, novi etiam cives mei, quando et vestrum beneficium ita tulit et fortuna hoc eguit mea, nemo vestrum condicionis meae oblitum me huc processisse putet; sed res ac periculum commune cogit quod quisque possit in re trepida praesidii in medium conferre. Et quando ego vobis pro tantis vestris in me meritis gratiam referam, si nunc cessavero? Aut ubi usus erit mei vobis, si in bello non fuerit? Hac arte in patria steti et invictus bello, in pace ab ingratis civibus pulsus sum. Vobis autem, Ardeates, fortuna oblata est et pro tantis populi Romani beneficiis, quanta ipsi meministis—nec enim exprobranda ea¹ apud memores sunt—gratiae referendae et huic urbi decus ingens belli ex hoste communi pariendi. Quae effuso agmine adventat gens est cui natura corpora animosque magna magis quam firma dederit; eo in certamen omne plus terroris quam virium ferunt. Argumento sit clades Romana. Patentem cepere urbem: ex arce Capitolioque iis exigua resistitur manu: iam obsidionis taedio victi abscedunt vagique per agros palantur. Cibo vinoque raptim hausto repleti, ubi

¹ exprobranda ea Alschefski U: exprobrandae P: exprobranda VOEHA: exprobrande MD²FB: exprobandae E²: exprobanda L: exprobrando D² or D⁴A².

in alarm were deliberating what to do about it. With B.C. 390 an inspiration nothing less than divine, he pushed into the midst of their conference,—though before accustomed to avoid these councils—and there, (XLIV.) “Men of Ardea,” he said, “my ancient friends, and of late my fellow citizens,—since your goodness would have it so and my own fortune has made it necessary,—let none of you suppose me to have come forward in forgetfulness of my condition; but circumstances and our common peril oblige every man at this crisis to contribute what he can to the general defence. And when shall I show gratitude for your great kindnesses to me, if I am backward now? Or when shall you have need of me, if not in war? ’Twas by this art that I stood secure in my native City: unbeaten in war, I was driven out in time of peace by the thankless citizens. But you, men of Ardea, have now an opportunity of requiting the Roman People for such great benefits as you yourselves are mindful of,—nor need I cast up to you things which you remember;—and your city has an opportunity to win from our common enemy great renown in war. That people now drawing near in loose array has been endowed by nature with bodily size and courage, great indeed but vacillating; which is the reason that to every conflict they bring more terror than strength. This may be seen in their defeat of the Romans. They captured the City, which lay wide open; but a handful of men in the Citadel and the Capitol are holding them at bay; already, oppressed by the tedium of the siege, they are departing and roaming aimlessly through the country-side. They greedily gorge themselves with food and wine, and when nox adpetit prope rivos aquarum sine munimento, sine stationibus ac custodiis passim ferarum ritu sternuntur, nunc ab secundis rebus magis etiam

 7 solito incauti. Si vobis in animo est tueri moenia vestra nec pati haec omnia Galliam fieri, prima vigilia capite arma frequentesque¹ me sequimini ad caedem, non ad pugnam. Nisi vinctos somno velut pecudes trucidandos tradidero, non recuso eundem Ardeae rerum mearum exitum, quem Romae habui."

XLV. Aequis iniquisque persuasum erat tantum bello virum neminem usquam ea tempestate esse. Contione dimissa corpora curant intenti quam mox signum daretur. Quo dato primae silentio noctis ad
 2 portas Camillo praesto fuere. Egressi haud procul urbe, sicut praedictum erat, castra Gallorum intuta neglectaque ab omni parte nacti cum ingenti clamore
 3 invadunt. Nusquam proelium, omnibus locis caedes est; nuda corpora et soluta somno trucidantur. Extremos tamen pavor cubilibus suis excitos, quae aut unde vis esset ignaros, in fugam et quosdam in hostem ipsum improvidos tulit. Magna pars in agrum Antiatem delati incursione ab oppidanis in palatos facta circumveniuntur.
 4 Similis in agro Veienti Tuscorum facta strages

¹ frequentesque V: frequentes Ω.

night approaches they erect no rampart, and without pickets or sentries, throw themselves down anywhere beside a stream, in the manner of wild beasts. Just now success has rendered them even more careless than they are wont to be. If you have a mind to protect your city and not to suffer all this country to become Gaul, arm yourselves in the first watch, and follow me in force, not to a battle but a massacre. If I do not deliver them up to you fast asleep, to be butchered like cattle, I am ready to submit at Ardea to the same fate that I endured at Rome.”

XLV. Well-wishers and opponents were alike persuaded that there was no such warrior in those days anywhere. Breaking up the council, they supped, and waited intently for the signal. On its being given, in the silence of the early night, they presented themselves before Camillus at the gates. They had not left the city very far behind them, when they came to the camp of the Gauls, unguarded, just as he had prophesied, and open on every side, and, giving a loud cheer, rushed upon it. There was no resistance anywhere: the whole place was a shambles, where unarmed men, relaxed in sleep, were slaughtered. Those, however, who were farthest off were frightened from the places where they lay, and ignorant of the nature of the attack or its source, fled panic-stricken, and some ran unawares straight into the enemy. The most of them were carried into the territory of Antium, where they wandered about until the townspeople sallied out and cut them off.

A similar overthrow was experienced, in the region of Veii, by the Etruscans. So far were they from est, qui urbis iam prope quadringentesimum annum vicinae, oppressae ab hoste invisitato, inaudito, adeo nihil miseriti sunt ut in agrum Romanum eo tempore incursiones facerent plenique praedae Veios etiam praesidiumque, spem ultimam Romani nominis, in 5 animo habuerint oppugnare. Viderant eos milites Romani vagantes per agros et congregato agmine praedam prae se agentis, et castra cernebant haud 6 procul Veiis posita. Inde primum miseratio sui, deinde indignitas atque ex ea ira animos cepit: Etruscisne¹ etiam, a quibus bellum Gallicum in se 7 avertissent, ludibrio esse clades suas? Vix temperare animis quin extemplo impetum facerent; compressi a Q. Caedicio centurione, quem sibimet 8 ipsi praefecerant, rem in noctem sustinuerunt. Tantum par Camillo defuit auctor: cetera eodem ordine eodemque fortunae eventu gesta. Quin etiam du- cibus captivis, qui caedi nocturnae superfuerant, ad aliam manum Tuscorum ad salinas profecti nocte insequenti ex improvise maiorem caedem edidere, duplicique victoria ovantes Veios redeunt.

XLVI. Romae interim plerumque obsidio segnis et utrimque silentium esse ad id tantum intentis Gallis ne quis hostium evadere inter stationes posset, cum repente iuvenis Romanus admiratione in se

¹ Etruscisne Vorm.? 5: etruscin MPHDLA: etruscis P²FUBOED³A³.

¹ Established according to tradition, by King Ancus (I. xxxiii. 9), on the right bank of the Tiber, not far from Ostia.

pitying a City that had been their neighbour for B.C. 390
 close upon four hundred years, and was now overwhelmed by an enemy never seen or heard of before, that they chose that time to make incursions into the lands of the Romans; and laden with spoils, even meditated an attack on Veii and its garrison, the last hope of the Roman name. The Roman soldiers had seen them, as they ranged through the fields and afterwards, gathering in a body, drove the booty off before them, and could descry their camp, which was pitched not far from Veii. This made them at first to compassionate themselves; then they were seized with resentment, which soon gave way to rage: were even the Etruscans, whom they had saved from the Gauls by incurring war themselves, to make sport of their calamities? They could hardly curb an impulse to assail them on the instant; but being restrained by the centurion Quintus Caedicius, whom they had chosen to be their commander, they postponed the affair till dark. The only thing wanting was a leader like Camillus; in all else the order followed was the same, and the same success was achieved. Indeed, under the guidance of captives who had survived the nocturnal massacre, they set out on the following night and came to another band of Etruscans, at the salt-works,¹ whom they surprised and defeated with even greater carnage; and so, rejoicing in their double victory, returned to Veii.

XLVI. At Rome meanwhile the siege was for the most part languishing and all was quiet on both sides, the Gauls being solely concerned with preventing the escape of any enemy through their lines, when suddenly a young Roman attracted the

A.U.C.
364

- 2 cives hostesque convertit. Sacrificium erat statum in Quirinali colle genti Fabiae. Ad id faciendum C. Fabius Dorsuo Gabino cinctu incinctus¹ sacra manibus gerens cum de Capitolio descendisset, per medias hostium stationes egressus nihil ad vocem cuiusquam terroremve motus in Quirinalem collem
- 3 pervenit; ibique omnibus sollemniter peractis eadem revertens similiter constanti vultu graduque, satis sperans propitios esse deos quorum cultum ne mortis quidem metu prohibitus deseruisset, in Capitolium ad suos rediit seu attonitis Gallis miraculo audaciae seu religione etiam motis, cuius haudquaquam negligens gens est.
- 4 Veiiis interim non animi tantum in dies sed etiam vires crescebant. Nec Romanis solum eo convenientibus ex agris qui aut proelio adverso aut clade captae urbis palati fuerant, sed etiam ex Latio voluntariis confluentibus ut in parte praedae essent,
- 5 maturum iam videbatur repeti patriam eripique ex hostium manibus; sed corpori valido caput deerat.
- 6 Locus ipse admonebat Camilli, et magna pars militum erat qui ductu auspicioque eius res prospere gesserant; et Caedicius negare se commissurum cur sibi aut deorum aut hominum quisquam imperium finiret potius quam ipse memor ordinis sui posceret
- 7 imperatorem. Consensu omnium placuit ab Ardea

¹ cinctu incinctus Walters: cinctus (cintus B: cunctus F) Ω : cinctu V Rhenanus.

¹ This was a mode of girding up the toga traditional in religious ceremonies.

wondering admiration of fellow citizens and foes. B.C. 390
 There was an annual sacrifice to be made on the Quirinal Hill by the family of the Fabii. To celebrate it Gaius Fabius Dorsuo, in the Gabinian cincture,¹ with the sacred vessels in his hands, descended from the Capitol, passed out through the midst of the enemy's pickets, and regardless of any words or threats, proceeded to the Quirinal, where he duly accomplished all the rites. He then returned by the same way, with the like resolute countenance and gait, in the full assurance of the favour of the gods whose service not even the fear of death could cause him to neglect, and rejoined his friends on the Capitol, leaving the Gauls dumb-founded by his astonishing audacity, or perhaps even moved by religious awe, a sentiment to which that race is far from indifferent.

At Veii, all this while, they were gathering from day to day, not courage merely, but strength as well. Not only were Romans coming in from the country-side,—men who had been wanderers since the defeat, or the capture of the City,—but volunteers were also pouring in from Latium, that they might share in the spoils. It seemed therefore that the time was now ripe to return to their native City and wrest it from the hands of the enemy; but their strong body lacked a head. The place itself reminded men of Camillus, and there were many of the soldiers who had fought successfully under his leadership and auspices. Moreover, Caedicius declared that he would suffer neither god nor man to put an end to his authority, but, remembering his station, would himself demand the appointment of a general. With the consent of all they resolved

A.U.C.
364

Camillum acciri, sed antea consulto senatu, qui 8 Romae esset: adeo regebat omnia pudor, discriminaque rerum prope perditis rebus servabant. Ingenti periculo transeundum per hostium custodias erat.
 Ad eam rem Pontius Cominus,¹ impiger iuvenis, operam pollicitus incubans cortici secundo Tiberi ad 9 urbem defertur. Inde qua proximum fuit a ripa, per praeruptum eoque neglectum hostium custodiae
 saxum in Capitolium evadit, et ad magistratus ductus 10 mandata exercitus edit. Accepto inde senatus con-sulto uti comitiis curiatis revocatus de exsilio iussu populi Camillus dictator extemplo diceretur militesque haberent imperatorem quem vellent, eadem de-11 gressus² nuntius Veios contendit; missique Ardeam legati ad Camillum Veios eum perduxere, seu—quod magis credere libet non prius profectum ab Ardea quam compererit³ legem latam, quod nec iniussu populi mutari finibus posset nec nisi dictator dictus auspicia in exercitu habere—lex curiata lata est dictatorque absens dictus.

XLVII. Dum haec Veiis agebantur, interim arx Romae Capitoliumque in ingenti periculo fuit.
 2 Namque Galli seu vestigio notato humano, qua nuntius a Veiis pervenerat, seu sua sponte animadverso ad Carmentis saxo ascensu aequo, nocte

¹ Cominus E Sigonius (Conway, Italic Dialects, p. 15):
 quominus Ω : comminus MO?: cominius *E*² (or *E*³) ς .

² degressus Sigonius: digressus (digresū B: *digressu B*¹) Ω .

³ compererit ς : comperit Ω : comperet M.

¹ The mother of Evander, whose name appears in i. vii. 8 in the form Carmenta.

to send for Camillus from Ardea, but not till the senate at Rome had been consulted; so modest were they in their conduct of everything, preserving the proper distinctions even in their well-nigh desperate case. It was necessary at enormous risk to pass the enemy's outposts. This an active youth named Pontius Cominus undertook to do, and supporting himself on a strip of cork, floated down the Tiber to the City. Once there, he passed by the shortest way from the bank up a cliff so steep that the enemy had neglected to guard it, to the Capitol, and being brought before the magistrates delivered to them the message from the army. Then, on the senate's resolving that the curiate comitia should recall Camillus from exile, and that, even as the people commanded he should straightway be appointed dictator, and the soldiers have the general they desired, the messenger returned by the same route and came in haste to Veii; whence envoys were despatched to Ardea for Camillus, and fetched him to Veii; or rather—as I prefer to believe that he did not quit Ardea until he had learnt that the law was passed, since he could not change his residence without the People's command, nor take the auspices in the army till he had been appointed dictator—the curiate law was passed and Camillus declared dictator, in his absence.

XLVII. While this was going on at Veii, the Citadel of Rome and the Capitol were in very great danger. For the Gauls had noticed the tracks of a man, where the messenger from Veii had got through, or perhaps had observed for themselves that the cliff near the shrine of Carmentis¹ afforded an easy ascent. So on a starlit night they first sent sublustri cum primo inermem qui temptaret viam praemisissent, tradentes inde arma ubi quid iniqui esset, alterni innixi sublevantesque in vicem et 3 trahentes alii alios, prout postularet locus, tanto silentio in summum evasere ut non custodes solum fallerent, sed ne canes quidem, sollicitum animal ad 4 nocturnos strepitus, excitarent. Anseres non fe-fellere quibus sacris Iunonis in summa inopia cibi tamen abstinebatur. Quae res saluti fuit; namque clangore eorum alarumque crepitu excitus M. Manlius qui triennio ante consul fuerat, vir bello egregius, armis arreptis simul ad arma ceteros ciens vadit, et dum ceteri trepidant, Gallum qui iam in summo

 5 constiterat umbone ictum deturbat. Cuius casus prolapsi cum proximos sterneret, trepidantes alios
 armisque omissis [saxa quibus adhaerebant manibus amplexos trucidat.¹ Iamque et alii congregati telis missilibusque saxis proturbare hostes, ruinaque tota 6 prolapsa acies in praeceps deferri. Sedato deinde tumultu reliquum noctis, quantum in turbatis men-tibus poterat, cum praeteritum quoque periculum 7 sollicitaret, quieti datum est. Luce orta vocatis classico ad concilium militibus ad tribunos, cum et recte et perperam facto pretium deberetur, Manlius primum ob virtutem laudatus donatusque non ab

¹ trucidat 5: trucidant Ω.

forward an unarmed man to try the way; then B.C. 390
handing up their weapons when there was a steep place, and supporting themselves by their fellows or affording support in their turn, they pulled one another up, as the ground required, and reached the summit, in such silence that not only the sentries but even the dogs—creatures easily troubled by noises in the night—were not aroused. But they could not elude the vigilance of the geese, which, being sacred to Juno, had, notwithstanding the dearth of provisions, not been killed. This was the salvation of them all; for the geese with their gabbling and clapping of their wings woke Marcus Manlius,—consul of three years before and a distinguished soldier,—who, catching up his weapons and at the same time calling the rest to arms, strode past his bewildered comrades to a Gaul who had already got a foothold on the crest and dislodged him with a blow from the boss of his shield. As he slipped and fell, he overturned those who were next to him, and the others in alarm let go their weapons and grasping the rocks to which they had been clinging, were slain by Manlius. And by now the rest had come together and were assailing the invaders with javelins and stones, and presently the whole company lost their footing and were flung down headlong to destruction. Then after the din was hushed, the rest of the night—so far as their excitement would permit, when even a past peril made them nervous—was given up to sleep. At dawn the trumpet summoned the soldiers to assemble before the tribunes. Good conduct and bad had both to be requited. First Manlius was praised for his courage and presented with gifts, not only by

- tribunis solum militum sed consensu etiam militari;
 8 cui universi selibras farris et quartarios vini ad
 aedes eius, quae in arce erant, contulerunt,—rem dictu parvam, ceterum inopia fecerat eam argu-mentum ingens caritatis, cum se quisque victu suo fraudans detractum corpori atque usibus necessariis 9 ad honorem unius viri conferret. Tum vigiles eius loci qua fefellerat adscendens hostis citati; et cum in omnes more militari se animadversurum Q.
 10 Sulpicius¹ tribunus militum pronuntiasset, consentiente clamore militum in unum vigilem conicientium culpam deterritus, a ceteris abstinuit, reum haud dubium eius noxae adprobantibus cunctis de 11 saxo deiecit. Inde intentiores utrimque custodiae esse, et apud Gallos, quia volgatum erat inter Veios Romamque nuntios comineare, et apud Romanos ab nocturni periculi memoria.

XLVIII. Sed ante omnia obsidionis bellique mala
 2 fames utrumque exercitum urgebat, Gallos pestilentia etiam, cum loco iacente inter tumulos castra habentes, tum ab incendiis torrido et vaporis pleno cineremque non pulverem modo ferente cum quid 3 venti motum esset. Quorum intolerantissima gens umorique ac frigori adsueta cum aestu et anguore vexata volgatis velut in pecua morbis morerentur,
 iam pigritia singulos sepeliendi promisce acervatos

¹ Q. Sulpicius Sigonius (cf. chap. xxxvi. § 11): p. (or publius or pubblus) sulpicius (or sulpitius) Ω.

BOOK V. XLVII. 7—XLVIII. 3

the tribunes of the soldiers, but by agreement B.C. 390 amongst the troops, who brought each half a pound of spelt and a gill of wine to his house, which stood in the Citadel. It is a little thing to tell, but the scarcity made it a great token of affection, since everyone robbed himself of his own sustenance and bestowed what he had subtracted from his physical necessities to do honour to one man. Then the watchmen of the cliff which the enemy had scaled without being discovered were called up. Quintus Sulpicius, the tribune, announced his intention to punish them all in the military fashion ; but deterred by the cries of the soldiers, who united in throwing the blame upon a single sentinel, he spared the others. This man was guilty beyond a doubt, and was flung from the rock with the approval of all. From that time the guards on both sides were more alert : the Gauls, because it had been put about that messengers were passing between Veii and Rome, the Romans, from their recollection of the peril of the night.

XLVIII. But worse than all the evils of the blockade and the war was the famine with which both armies were afflicted. The Gauls suffered also from a pestilence, being encamped between hills on low ground, parched and heated by the conflagration, where the air was filled with ashes, as well as dust, whenever a breeze sprang up. These annoyances were intolerable to a race accustomed to damp and cold, and when, distressed by the suffocating heat, they began to sicken of diseases that spread as though the victims had been cattle, they were soon too slothful to bury their dead singly, and piling the bodies up in promiscuous heaps, they burned them,

A.U.C.
364

cumulos hominum urebant; bustorumque inde Gal-4 licorum nomine insignem locum fecere. Indutiae deinde cum Romanis factae et colloquia permissu imperatorum habita; in quibus cum identidem Galli famem obicerent eaque necessitate ad deditionem vocarent, dicitur avertendae eius opinionis causa multis locis panis de Capitolio iactatus esse in 5 hostium stationes. Sed iam neque dissimulari neque ferri ultra fames poterat. Itaque dum dictator dilectum per se Ardeae habet, magistrum equitum
 L. Valerium a Veiis adducere exercitum iubet, parat instruitque quibus haud impar adoriatur hostes, 6 interim Capitolinus exercitus stationibus vigiliisque¹ fessus superatis tamen humanis omnibus malis cum famem unam natura vinci non sineret, diem de die
 prospectans ecquod auxilium ab dictatore appareret, 7 postremo spe quoque iam non solum cibo deficiente et cum stationes procederent prope obruentibus infirmum corpus armis, vel dedi vel redimi se qua-cumque pactione possent iussit, iactantibus non obscure Gallis haud magna mercede se adduci 8 posse ut obsidionem relinquant. Tum senatus habitus tribunisque militum negotium datum ut paciscerentur. Inde inter Q. Sulpicium² tri-bunum militum et Brennum regulum Gallorum

¹ vigiliisque *D*⁴γ: et uigiliis O: uigiliis Ω.

² Q. Sulpicium Sigonius (cf. chap. xlvii. § 9): p. sulpicium (-tum L) Ω.

¹ Livy tells us in xxii. xiv. 11, that the Busta Gallica
 were in the middle of the City, but the exact site cannot be determined.

causing the place to be known from that circumstance as the Gallic Pyres.¹ A truce was afterwards made with the Romans, and the commanders allowed their soldiers to talk together. Since in these conversations the Gauls used frequently to taunt their enemies with their famished state, and call on them to yield to that necessity and surrender, the Romans are said, in order to do away with this opinion, to have cast bread down from the Capitol in many places, into the outposts of the enemy. Yet at last they could neither dissemble their hunger nor endure it any longer. The dictator was now holding a levy of his own at Ardea, and having ordered the master of the horse, Lucius Valerius, to bring up his army from Veii, was mustering and drilling a force with which he might cope with the Gauls on equal terms. But the army on the Capitol was worn out with picket duty and mounting guard; and though they had got the better of all human ills, yet was there one, and that was famine, which nature would not suffer to be overcome. Day after day they looked out to see if any relief from the dictator was at hand; but at last even hope, as well as food, beginning to fail them, and their bodies growing almost too weak to sustain their armour when they went out on picket duty, they declared that they must either surrender or ransom themselves, on whatever conditions they could make; for the Gauls were hinting very plainly that no great price would be required to induce them to raise the siege. Thereupon the senate met, and instructed the tribunes of the soldiers to arrange the terms. Then, at a conference between Lucius Sulpicius the tribune and the Gallic chieftain Brennus, the affair

A.U.C.
364

conloquio transacta res est, et mille pondo auri pretium populi gentibus mox imperaturi factum.
 9 Rei foedissimae per se adiecta indignitas est: pondera ab Gallis allata iniqua, et tribuno recusante additus ab insolente Gallo ponderi gladius, auditaque intoleranda Romanis vox, Vae victis.¹

XLIX. Sed diique et homines prohibuere redemptos vivere Romanos. Nam forte quadam, priusquam infanda merces perficeretur, per altercationem nondum omni auro adpenso, dictator intervenit auferrique aurum de medio et Gallos summoveri iubet.
 2 Cum illi renitentes pactos dicerent sese, negat eam pactionem ratam esse quae, postquam ipse dictator creatus esset, iniussu suo ab inferioris iuris magistratu facta esset, denuntiatque Gallis ut se ad
 3 proelium expediant. Suos in acervum conicere sarcinas et arma aptare ferroque non auro recipere² patriam iubet, in conspectu habentes fana deum et coniuges et liberos et solum patriae deforme belli malis et omnia quae defendi repetique et ulcisci
 4 fas sit. Instruit deinde aciem, ut loci natura patiebatur, in semirutae solo urbis et natura inaequali, et omnia quae arte belli secunda suis eligi praepararive
 5 poterant providit. Galli nova re trepidi arma capi-

¹ Vae victis Duker: uae (ue PF?UOA: ut *F*³) uictis esse Ω : ictis esse V.

² recipere Conway and Walters (cf. their note on I. xii. 1): recuperare (and in § 7) Ω .

was settled, and a thousand pounds of gold was B.C. 390 agreed on as the price of a people that was destined presently to rule the nations. The transaction was a foul disgrace in itself, but an insult was added thereto: the weights brought by the Gauls were dishonest, and on the tribune's objecting, the insolent Gaul added his sword to the weight, and a saying intolerable to Roman ears was heard,—Woe to the conquered!

XLIX. But neither gods nor men would suffer the Romans to live ransomed. For, by some chance, before the infamous payment had been consummated, and when the gold had not yet, owing to the dispute, been all weighed out, the dictator appeared and commanded the gold to be cleared away and the Gauls to leave. They objected vehemently, and insisted on the compact; but Camillus denied the validity of that compact which, subsequently to his own appointment as dictator, an inferior magistrate had made without his authorization, and warned them to prepare for battle. His own men he ordered to throw their packs in a heap, make ready their weapons, and win their country back with iron instead of gold; having before their eyes the temples of the gods, their wives and their children, the soil of their native land, with the hideous marks of war upon it, and all that religion called upon them to defend, recover, or avenge. He then drew up his line, as well as the ground permitted, on the naturally uneven surface of the half-ruined City, and saw to it that his soldiers had every advantage in choice of position and in preparation which the art of war suggested. The Gauls were taken aback; they armed, and, with more rage than judgment,

- unt iraque magis quam consilio in Romanos incur-runt. Iam verterat fortuna, iam deorum opes humanaque consilia rem Romanam adiuvant.
Igitur primo concursu haud maiore momento fusi
6 Galli sunt quam ad Alliam vicerant. Iustiore altero deinde proelio ad octavum lapidem Gabina via, quo
se ex fuga contulerant, eiusdem ductu auspicioque Camilli vincuntur. Ibi cades omnia obtinuit; castra
7 capiuntur et ne nuntius quidem cladis relictus. Dictator recuperata ex hostibus patria triumphans in urbem redit, interque iocos militares, quos incon-ditos iaciunt, Romulus ac parens patriae conditorque alter urbis haud vanis laudibus appellabatur.
- 8 Servatam deinde bello patriam iterum in pace
haud dubie servavit cum prohibuit migrari Veios, et tribunis rem intentius agentibus post incensam urbem
et per se inclinata magis plebe ad id consilium; eaque causa fuit non abdicandae post triumphum dictaturae senatu obsecrante ne rem publicam in incerto relinqueret statu. L. Omnium primum, ut erat diligen-tissimus religionum cultor, quae ad deos immortales
2 pertinebant rettulit et senatus consultum facit: fana omnia, quoad ¹ ea hostis possedisset, restituerentur terminarentur expiarenturque, expiatioque eorum in

¹ quoad Mommsen: quod Ω .

charged the Romans. But now fortune had turned; B.C. 390
 now the might of Heaven and human wisdom were engaged in the cause of Rome. Accordingly, at the first shock the Gauls were routed with as little effort as they had themselves put forth to conquer on the Allia. They afterwards fought a second, more regular engagement, eight miles out on the Gabinian Way, where they had rallied from their flight, and again the generalship and auspices of Camillus overcame them. Here the carnage was universal; their camp was taken; and not a man survived to tell of the disaster. The dictator, having recovered his country from her enemies, returned in triumph to the city; and between the rough jests uttered by the soldiers, was hailed in no unmeaning terms of praise as a Romulus and Father of his Country and a second Founder of the City.

His native City, which he had saved in war, he then indubitably saved a second time, now that peace was won, by preventing the migration to Veii: though the tribunes were more zealous for the plan than ever, now that the City lay in ashes, and the plebs were of themselves more inclined to favour it. This was the reason of his not resigning the dictatorship after his triumph, for the senate besought him not to desert the state in its hour of uncertainty. L. His first act, in conformity with his scrupulous attention to religion, was to lay before the senate such matters as pertained to the immortal gods, and to obtain the passage of a decree that all shrines, in so far as they had been in the enemy's possession, should be restored, their boundaries established, and rites of purification celebrated, and that the duumvirs should

3 libris per duumviros quaereretur; cum Caeritibus hospitium publice fieret quod sacra populi Romani
 ac sacerdotes recepissent, beneficioque eius populi 4 non intermissus honos deorum immortalium esset;
 ludi Capitolini fierent, quod Iuppiter optimus maxi-mus suam sedem atque arcem populi Romani in re
 trepida tutatus esset; collegiumque ad eam rem M.
 Furius dictator constitueret ex iis¹ qui in Capitolio
 5 atque arce habitarent. Expiandae etiam vocis nocturnae quae nuntia cladis ante bellum Gallicum audita neglectaque esset mentio inlata, iussumque 6 templum in Nova via Aio Locutio² fieri. Aurum quod Gallis ereptum erat quodque ex aliis templis inter trepidationem in Iovis cellam conlatum, cum quo³ referri oporteret confusa memoria esset, sacrum 7 omne iudicatum et sub Iovis sella poni iussum. Iam ante in eo religio civitatis apparuerat quod cum in publico deesset aurum, ex quo summa pactae mer-cedis Gallis confieret, a matronis conlatum accepe-rant ut sacro auro abstineretur. Matronis gratiae actae honosque additus ut earum sicut virorum post 8 mortem sollemnis laudatio esset. His peractis, quae ad deos pertinebant quaeque per senatum agi po-

¹ iis 5: hiis A: eis VU: his Ω.

² in Nova via Aio Locutio Sigonius (cf. Gellius XVI. xvii. 2, Cic. Div. I. 101, II. 69): in noua ia locutio M: in noua iam locutio (or similar corruptions) Ω.

³ quo Mommsen: quo re V: in quae (iniquē H) Ω.

¹ The Sybilline Books.

² The god of Utterance. This "temple" is evidently the "chapel" spoken of at chap. xxxii. § 2.

search the Books¹ for the proper rites; that a covenant B.C. 390 of hospitality should be entered into by the state with the people of Caere, because they had received the holy things of the Roman People and its priests, and thanks to their good offices worship of the immortal gods had not been interrupted; that Capitoline
Games should be held, because Jupiter Optimus
Maximus had protected his own abode and the Citadel of the Roman People in its time of danger; and that Marcus Furius the dictator should to that end constitute a board consisting of men who lived on the Capitol and the Citadel. A proposal was made, too, for propitiating the voice which was heard in the night to foretell disaster before the Gallic War, and was disregarded, and a temple was ordered to be built in the Nova Via to Aius Locutius.² The gold which had been carried away from the Gauls and that which had been collected from other temples during the alarm and carried into the shrine of Jupiter, since there was no clear recollection where it ought to be returned, was all adjudged to be sacred and ordered to be deposited under the throne of Jupiter.
Even before this the scrupulousness of the citizens had been apparent in this connexion, for when the gold in the public coffers was insufficient to make up to the Gauls the stipulated sum, they had accepted what the matrons got together, that they might not touch the sacred gold. For this a vote of thanks was given to the matrons, and they were granted the honour of having eulogies pronounced at their funerals, as in the case of the men. After these measures, which related to the gods and lay within the competence of the senate, had been enacted, then, and only then, heeding the importunity of the

A.U.C.
364

terant, tum demum agitantibus tribunis plebem adsiduis contionibus, ut relictis ruinis in urbem paratam Veios transmigrarent, in contionem universo senatu prosequente escendit atque ita verba fecit:

LI. "Adeo mihi acerbae sunt, Quirites, contentiones cum tribunis plebis, ut nec tristissimi exsilii solacium aliud habuerim, quoad Ardeae vixi, quam quod procul ab his certaminibus eram, et ob eadem haec non si miliens senatus consulto¹ populique
2 iussu revocaretis, rediturus unquam fuerim. Nec nunc me ut redirem mea voluntas mutata sed vestra fortuna perpulit; quippe ut in sua sede maneret patria, id agebatur, non ut ego utique in patria essem. Et nunc quiescerem ac tacerem libenter, nisi haec quoque pro patria dimicatio esset; cui deesse, quoad vita suppetat, aliis turpe, Camillo
3 etiam nefas est. Quid enim repetimus,² quid obsessam ex hostium manibus eripuimus, si reciperatam ipsi deserimus? Et cum victoribus Gallis capta tota urbe Capitolium tamen atque arcem dique et homines Romani tenuerint,³ victoribus Romanis reciperrata urbe arx quoque et Capitolium deseretur, et plus vastitatis huic urbi secunda nostra fortuna
4 faciet quam adversa fecit? Equidem si nobis cum urbe simul positae traditaeque per manus religiones

¹ si miliens senatus consulto Weissenborn: si mille Sīc S M: simile senatus consulti V: simillae sic (or other corruptions) Ω.

² repetimus ς: repetimus Ω.

³ tenuerint Conway: tenuerint habitauerint Ω (but there is a punct. in a space before and in one after habitauerint in PFO, and after it in E, and D⁴ marks it as interpolated, while F writes it with a capital H): tenuerint et habitauerint V.

tribunes, who were urging the plebs unceasingly to quit their ruins and emigrate to a city ready to their hand at Veii, Camillus went up into the assembly, attended by the entire senate, and discoursed as follows :

LI. "So painful to me, Quirites, are these controversies with the tribunes of the plebs, that my most bitter exile knew no other solace but this, all the time that I lived at Ardea, that I was far away from these contentions. And they are likewise the cause that though you had a thousand times recalled me by resolution of the senate and the people's vote, I intended never to return. Nor have I now been induced to do so by any change in my desires, but by the alteration in your fortunes. For the issue was this, that my countrymen should abide in their own home, not that I, at any or all costs, should be with my countrymen. Even now I would gladly stop and hold my peace, were not this too the quarrel of my country; whom to fail while life endures is in other men disgraceful, but in Camillus impious. For why did we seek to win her back, why rescue her, when besieged, from the hands of the enemy, if, now that she is recovered, we voluntarily abandon her? And although, while the Gauls were victorious and in possession of the entire City, the Capitol nevertheless and the Citadel were held by the gods and men of Rome, shall we now, when the Romans are victorious and the City is regained, desert even Citadel and Capitol? Shall our prosperity make Rome more desolate than our adversity has done? Indeed, if we had no religious rites established with the founding of the City and by tradition handed down,

A.U.C.
364

nullae essent, tamen tam evidens numen hac tempe-state rebus adfuit Romanis ut omnem negligentiam 5 divini cultus exemptam hominibus putem. Intuemini enim horum deinceps annorum vel secundas
 res vel adversas; invenietis omnia prospera evenisse 6 sequentibus deos, adversa spernentibus. Iam omnium primum Veiens bellum—per quot annos quanto la-bore gestum!—non ante cepit finem quam monitu
 7 deorum aqua ex lacu Albano emissa est. Quid haec tandem urbis nostrae clades nova? Num ante exorta est quam spreta vox caelo emissa de adventu Gallo-rum, quam gentium ius ab legatis nostris violatum, quam a nobis, cum vindicari deberet, eadem negle-8 gentia deorum praetermissum? Igitur victi captique ac redempti tantum poenarum dis hominibusque de-9 dimus ut terrarum orbi documento essemus. Adversae deinde res admonuerunt religionum. Confugimus in Capitolium ad deos, ad sedem Iovis optimi maximi;
 sacra in ruina rerum nostrarum alia terra¹ celavimus,
 alia aucta in finitimas urbes amovimus ab hostium
 oculis; deorum cultum deserti ab dis hominibusque 10 tamen non intermisimus. Reddidere igitur patriam et victoriam et antiquum belli decus amissum; et in hostes qui caeci avaritia in pondere auri foedus ac fidem fefellerunt verterunt terrorem fugamque et caedem.

¹ terra ς Gronovius : terrae Ω .

yet so manifest has at this time the divine purpose B.C. 390 been in the affairs of Rome, that I for one should suppose it no longer possible for men to neglect the worship of the gods. For consider these past few years in order, with their successes and reverses ;
 you will find that all things turned out well when we obeyed the gods, and ill when we spurned them.
 First of all, the war with Veii. How many years we fought, and with what painful exertion ! And the end came not, until, admonished by Heaven, we drew the water off from the Alban Lake. What, I beseech you, of this strange disaster that lately overwhelmed our City ? Did it come before we disregarded the voice from Heaven that announced the approach of the Gauls ? before the law of nations was violated by our envoys ? before we, that ought to have punished their fault, had passed it by, with the same indifference towards the gods ? Therefore were we conquered, led captive, and put to ransom ;
 and suffered such punishments at the hands of gods
 and men as to be a warning to all the world.
 Adversity then turned our thoughts upon religion.
 We fled for refuge to the Capitol and its gods, to the seat of Jupiter Optimus Maximus ; of our holy things, some, in the ruin of our fortunes, we concealed in the earth, others we removed to neighbouring cities out of sight of our enemies ; in the worship of the gods, albeit forsaken of gods and men, yet were we unceasing. Therefore have they given us our native land again, and victory, and our ancient renown in war that we had forfeited ; and against our enemies, who, blinded with greed, broke treaty and troth in the weighing of the gold, have they turned dismay and rout and slaughter.

A.U.C.
364

LII. "Hæc culti neglectique numinis tanta momenta¹ in rebus humanis cernentes ecquid sentitis, Quirites, quantum vixdum e naufragiis prioris culpæ
 2 cladisque emergentes paremus nefas? Urbem auspicato inauguratoque conditam habemus; nullus locus in ea non religionum deorumque est plenus; sacrificiis sollemnibus non dies magis statim quam loca
 3 sunt, in quibus fiant. Hos omnes deos publicos privatosque, Quirites, deserturi estis? Quam par vestrum factum ei est,² quod in obsidione nuper in egregio adulescente C. Fabio non minore hostium admiratione quam vestra conspectum est, cum inter Gallica tela degressus³ ex arce sollemne Fabiæ
 4 gentis in colle Quirinali obiit? An gentilicia sacra ne in bello quidem intermitteri, publica sacra et Romanos deos etiam in pace deseri placet, et pontifices flaminesque neglegentiores publicarum religionum
 5 esse quam privatus in sollemni gentis fuerit? Forsitan aliquis dicat aut Veiis ea nos facturos aut huc inde missuros sacerdotes nostros qui faciant; quorum
 6 neutrum fieri salvis caerimoniis potest. Et ne omnia generatim sacra omnesque percenseam deos, in Iovis epulo num alibi quam in Capitolio pulvinar suscipi
 7 potest? Quid de æternis Vestæ ignibus signoque quod imperii pignus custodia eius templi tenetur loquar? Quid de ancilibus vestris, Mars Gradive

¹ momenta, γ: monumenta (or-nim-) Ω: munimenta MBO.

² factum ei est Drakenborch: factum est Ω.

³ degressus Sigonius (cf. chap. xlvii § 10): digressus Ω.

¹ On the 15th of November the senate held a stately banquet at which a couch was placed for Jupiter, and Juno and Minerva occupied stools on either side of the god.

² The image of Pallas (Palladium), fabled to have been brought to Italy by Aeneas.

LII. "As you consider these momentous effects B.C. 390 upon the affairs of men, of serving the deity and of neglecting him, do you begin, Quirites, to perceive how, though yet scarce clear of the wreckage of our former guilt and calamity, we are headed towards a grievous sin? We have a City founded with due observance of auspice and augury; no corner of it is not permeated by ideas of religion and the gods; for our annual sacrifices, the days are no more fixed than are the places where they may be performed. Do you intend, Quirites, to abandon all these gods, both of state and of family? How squares your conduct with that of the noble young man Gaius Fabius in the recent siege, which the enemy beheld with no less astonishment and admiration than yourselves, when he descended from the Citadel through the missiles of the Gauls and offered the annual sacrifice of the Fabian clan on the Quirinal Hill? What? Would you suffer no interruption, even in war, of family rites, but desert the national worship and the gods of Rome in time of peace? Would you have the pontiffs and the flamens less careful of the ceremonies of the state religion than a private citizen has been of the anniversary of his clan? Perhaps someone may say that we shall either do these things at Veii, or thence dispatch our priests to Rome to do them; but of these courses neither can be followed without violation of the sacred usages. For, not to enumerate all the kinds of rites and all the gods, is it possible at the feast of Jupiter¹ that the couch should be spread elsewhere than in the Capitol? Why need I speak of Vesta's eternal fires, and the image² which is preserved as a pledge of empire in her temple? or of your sacred tuque, Quirine pater? Haec omnia in profano deseri placet sacra aequalia urbi, quaedam vetustiora origine urbis?

A.U.C.
364

- 8 “Et videte quid inter nos ac maiores intersit. Illi sacra quaedam in monte Albano Laviniique¹ nobis facienda tradiderunt. An ex hostium urbibus Romanam ad nos transferri sacra religiosum fuit, hinc sine piaculo in hostium urbem Veios transferemus?
- 9 Recordamini, agite dum, quotiens sacra instaurentur, quia aliquid ex patrio ritu negligentia casuve praetermissum est. Modo quae res post prodigium Albani lacus nisi instauratio sacrorum auspiciorumque renovatio adfectae Veienti bello rei publicae
- 10 remedio fuit? At etiam, tamquam veterum religionum memores, et peregrinos deos transtulimus Romanam et instituimus novos. Iuno regina transvecta a Veiiis nuper in Aventino quam insigni ob excellens matronarum studium celebrique dedicata est die!
- 11 Aio Locutio² templum propter caelestem vocem exauditam in Nova via iussimus fieri; Capitolinos ludos sollemnibus aliis addidimus collegiumque ad
- 12 id novum auctore senatu condidimus; quid horum opus fuit suscipi, si una cum Gallis urbem Romanam relicturi fuimus, si non voluntate mansimus in Capitolio per tot menses obsidionis, sed ab hostibus metu
- 13 retenti sumus? De sacris loquimur et de templis;

¹ Laviniique Gronovius: lauinioque MHDL ‘antiqua lectio’ Rhenanus; lauinioque Ω .

² Aio Locutio Gebhard: aputa locutio V: ad locutio D: ad locutio A: allocutio (and similar corruptions) Ω .

¹ See I. xx. 4, and note.

shields,¹ O Mars Gradivus and Quirinus our Father? B.C. 390
 All these would you leave behind on unconsecrated ground—things coeval with the City, and some more ancient than its origin?

“And mark what a difference between us and our forefathers! They handed down to us certain rites to be solemnized on the Alban Mount and in Lavinium. But if we scrupled to transfer sacred rites from hostile cities to ourselves in Rome, can we shift them without sin from Rome to Veii, city of our enemies? Recollect, I beg you, how often sacrifices are renewed because some point of antique ritual has been, through carelessness or accident, omitted. What was it, a while ago, after the portent of the Alban Lake, that brought relief to the commonwealth—then in the throes of war with Veii—if not a renewal of the sacred rites and auspices? But, more than that, like men mindful of their old religious fervour, we have both brought in foreign deities to Rome and established new ones. Queen Juno was lately conveyed from Veii and enshrined on the Aventine, and how notable was that day, for the zeal of the matrons and the throng! We have ordered a temple to be built for Aius Locutius because of the voice from heaven, clearly heard in the Nova Via. We have added Capitoline Games to the other annual festivals, and by authority of the senate have established a new college for this purpose. Was there any of these things we needed to have undertaken, if we meant to retire from Rome along with the Gauls; if we remained not voluntarily in the Capitol, through so many months of siege, but constrained by fear of the enemy? We talk of sacred rites and temples;

A.U.C.
364

quid tandem de sacerdotibus? Nonne in mentem venit quantum piaculi committatur? Vestalibus nempe una illa sedes est, ex qua eas nihil unquam praeterquam urbs capta movit; flomini Diali noctem unam manere extra urbem nefas est; hos Veientis 14 pro Romanis facturi estis sacerdotes, et Vestales tuae te deserent, Vesta, et flamen peregre habitando in singulas noctes tantum sibi rei publicae piaculi
 15 contrahet? Quid alia quae auspicato agimus omnia fere intra pomerium, cui oblivioni aut cui negle-
 16 gentiae damus? Comitata curiata, quae rem militarem continent, comitia centuriata, quibus consules tribunosque militaris creatis, ubi auspicato, nisi ubi ad-
 17 solent, fieri possunt? Veiosne haec transferemus? An comitiorum causa populus tanto incommodo in desertam hanc ab dis hominibusque urbem conveniet?

LIII. "At enim apparet quidem pollui omnia¹ nec ullis piaculis expiari posse, sed res ipsa cogit vastam incendiis ruinisque relinquere urbem et ad integra omnia Veios migrare nec hic aedificando inopem
 2 plebem vexare. Hanc autem iactari magis causam quam veram esse, ut ego non dicam, apparere vobis, Quirites, puto, qui meministis ante Gallorum adventum salvis tectis publicis privatisque, stante incolumi

¹ quidem pollui omnia Mudvig: quidem P (or I)
 nia V: the other MSS. omit at enim—expiari posse.

¹ Livy has in mind one important exception: the centuriate comitia met outside the pomerium, usually in the Campus Martius.

pray, what about the priests? Do you never think B.C. 390
 what a sacrilege you are about? The Vestals surely have but that one dwelling-place, from which nothing ever caused them to remove but the capture of the City; the Flamen Dialis may not lie for a single night outside the City, without sin. Will you make these priests Veientine instead of Roman? Shall thy Virgins forsake thee, Vesta, and the Flamen, as he dwells abroad, bring, night after night, such guilt upon himself and the republic? What about the other matters nearly all of which¹ we transact, after taking auspices, within the pomerium? To what oblivion and neglect do we consign them? The curiate comitia which deals with the business of war, the centuriate comitia, where you elect the consuls and military tribunes—where can these be held, with due observance of the auspices, save in the customary places? Shall we transfer them to Veii? Or shall the people, for the sake of the comitia assemble with enormous inconvenience in this City, forsaken of god and man?

LIII. “‘But,’ you will say, ‘while it is obvious that everything will be polluted beyond all possibility of purification, yet the situation itself compels us to leave a City which fires and falling buildings have made a wilderness, and emigrate to Veii, where everything is untouched, nor vex the helpless commons with building here.’ But that this is rather a pretext than a true reason is, I think, apparent to you, Quirites, without my saying so; for you remember how, before the coming of the Gauls, when our roof-trees, public and private, were unharmed and our City stood uninjured, that this same proposal was

A.U.C.
364

urbe, hanc eandem rem actam esse ut Veios trans-3 migraremus. Et videte quantum inter meam sen-tentiam vestramque intersit, tribuni. Vos, etiamsi tunc faciendum non fuerit, nunc utique faciendum putatis: ego contra—nec id mirati sitis priusquam quale sit audieritis—etiamsi tum migrandum fuisset incolumi tota urbe, nunc has ruinas relinquendas 4 non censerem. Quippe tum causa nobis in urbem captam migrandi victoria esset, gloriosa nobis ac
 posteris nostris; nunc haec migratio nobis misera
 5 ac turpis, Gallis gloriosa est. Non enim reliquisse victores sed amisisse victi patriam videbimur: hoc ad Alliam fuga, hoc capta urbs, hoc circumsessum Capitolium necessitatis imposuisse, ut desereremus penates nostros exiliumque ac fugam nobis ex eo loco conscisceremus quem tueri non possemus. Et Galli evertere potuerunt Romam, Romani¹ restituere
 6 non videbuntur potuisse? Quid restat nisi ut, si iam novis copiis veniant—constat enim vix credibilem multitudinem esse—et habitare in capta ab se, 7 deserta a vobis hac urbe velint, sinatis? Quid? si non Galli hoc sed veteres hostes vestri, Aequi Volscive, faciant ut commigrent Romam, velitisne illos Romanos, vos Veientes esse? An non² malitis hanc solitudinem vestram quam urbem hostium esse? Non equidem video quid magis nefas sit.
 Haec scelera, quia piget aedificare, haec dedecora

¹ Romani Madvig: quam Romani Ω.

² An non Conway and Walters (note): an Ω: Non L²: non D?: ñ HLA.

urged, of migrating to Veii.¹ And consider, tribunes, B.C. 390
 how wide is the difference between my view and yours. You think that even if then it ought not to have been done, yet now at any rate it ought; I on the contrary—and be not astonished at this, till you have heard what my meaning is,—even if it had been right to migrate then, with the City all intact, should not think it right to abandon these ruins now. For then our victory would have been a reason for migrating to a captured city—a reason glorious to ourselves and our posterity; but now such a removal is for us a wretched and humiliating course, and a glory to the Gauls. For we shall not seem to have left our country as victors, but to have lost it as men vanquished. It will be thought that the rout on the Allia, the capture of the City, the blockade of the Capitol, have compelled us to forsake our family gods, and sentence ourselves to banishment and exile from that place which we were powerless to defend. Have Gauls then been able to cast Rome down; and must Romans appear unable to have raised her up? What remains, if they should presently come with fresh forces—for all agree that their numbers are scarce to be believed,— and should wish to dwell in this City which they have captured and you have abandoned, but that you should suffer them? What if not the Gauls but your ancient foes the Volsci and Aequi should migrate to Rome? Should you like them to be Romans, and yourselves Veientes? Or should you not prefer this to be your wilderness, rather than the city of your enemies? For my part I do not see what could be more abominable. Are you ready to stomach these outrages, these infamies, because it

A.U.C.
364

8 pati parati estis? Si tota urbe nullum melius ampliusve tectum fieri possit quam casa illa conditoris est nostri, non in casis ritu pastorum agrestiumque habitare est satius inter sacra penatesque nostros 9 quam exsulatum publice ire? Maiores nostri, convenae pastoresque, cum in his locis nihil praeter silvas paludesque esset, novam urbem tam brevi aedificarunt: nos Capitolio atque arce¹ incolumi, stantibus templis deorum aedificare incensa piget?
Et quod singuli facturi fuimus, si aedes nostrae de-flagrassent, hoc in publico incendio universi recusa-mus facere?

LIV. "Quid tandem? Si fraude, si casu Veis in-cendium ortum sit, ventoque, ut fieri potest, diffusa flamma magnam partem urbis absumat, Fidenas inde aut Gabios aliamve quam urbem quaesituri sumus 2 quo transmigremus? Adeo nihil tenet solum patriae nec haec terra quam matrem appellamus, sed in superficie tignisque caritas nobis patriae pendet? Et 3 quidem—fatebor vobis, etsi minus iniuriae vestrae² meminisse iuvat—cum abessem, quotienscumque
patria in mentem veniret, haec omnia occurrebant, colles campique et Tiberis et adsueta oculis regio et hoc caelum sub quo natus educatusque essem; quae
vos, Quirites, nunc moveant potius caritate sua ut maneatis in sede vestra, quam postea, cum relique-4 ritis eam, macerent desiderio. Non sine causa di

¹ atque arce Wesenberg: arce Ω .

² iniuriae vestrae Conway and Walters: iniuriae vestrae quam meae calamitatis (quam calamitatis meae HDLA) Ω .

¹ The casa Romuli stood on the Palatine, on the side next the Circus Maximus, and a hut which went by this name was preserved and venerated as late as Livy's own time.

irks you to build? If in all the City no house could B.C. 390 be put up better or bigger than is the famous Hut of our Founder,¹ would it not be better to live in huts, as shepherds and rustics do, amongst our sacred monuments and our household gods, than to go forth as a nation into exile? Our ancestors, refugees and herdsmen, at a time when there was nothing in this region but forests and marshes, built quickly a new City; and are we loath, though Capitol and Citadel are untouched and the temples of the gods are standing, to rebuild what has been destroyed by fire? And what each would have done for himself, if his house had been burned, shall we refuse to do together after this common conflagration?

LIV. "Or suppose that by crime or chance a fire should break out at Veii, and that the wind should spread the flames, as may easily happen, until they consume a great part of the city; are we to quit
 it, and seek out Fidenæ, or Gabii, or any other town you like, and migrate thither? Have the soil of our native City and this land which we call our mother so slight a hold on us? Is our love of country confined to buildings and rafters? And in truth I will confess to you—though I like not to recall the wrong you did me—that as often, during my absence, as I thought of my native place, all these objects came into my mind: the hills and the fields and the Tiber and the region familiar to my eyes, and this sky beneath which I had been born and reared. And I wish these things may rather move you now with love, Quirites, to make you abide in your own home, than afterwards, when you have left it, torment you with vain regrets.
 Not without cause did gods and men select this

A.U.C.
364

hominesque hunc urbi condendae locum elegerunt, saluberrimos colles, flumen opportunum, quo ex mediterraneis locis fruges devehantur, quo maritimi commeatus accipiantur, mare vicinum ad commoditates nec expositum nimia propinquitate ad pericula classium externarum, regionem Italiae mediam,¹ 5 ad incrementum urbis natum unice locum. Argumento est ipsa magnitudo tam novae urbis. Trecentissimus sexagensimus quintus annus urbis, Quirites, agitur; inter tot veterrimos populos tam diu bella geritis, cum interea, ne singulas loquar urbes, non coniuncti cum Aequis Volsci, tot tam valida oppida, non universa Etruria tantum terra marique pollens atque inter duo maria latitudinem obtinens Italiae
 6 bello vobis par est. Quod cum ita sit, quae, malum, ratio est haec expertis alia² experiri, cum, iam ut virtus vestra transire alio possit, fortuna certe loci
 7 huius transferri non possit? Hic Capitolium est, ubi quondam capite humano invento responsum est eo loco caput rerum summamque imperii fore; hic cum augurato liberaretur Capitolium, Iuventas Terminusque maximo gaudio patrum vestrorum moveri se non passi; hic Vestae ignes, hic ancilia caelo demissa, hic omnes propitii manentibus vobis di."

LV. Movisse eos Camillus cum alia oratione tum ea quae ad religiones pertinebat maxime dicitur; sed

¹ regionem Italiae mediam Madvig: regionum (geonum E regionum *E*¹ or *E*²) Italiae medium Ω.

² haec expertis alia Walters: expertis alia MOHDLA: expertis latos alia PFUE: expertis latos alia B.

place for establishing our City—with its healthful hills; its convenient river, by which crops may be floated down from the midland regions and foreign commodities brought up; its sea, near enough for use, yet not exposing us, by too great propinquity, to peril from foreign fleets; a situation in the heart of Italy—a spot, in short, of a nature uniquely adapted for the expansion of a city. This is proved by the very greatness of so new a place. It is now, Quirites, in its three hundred and sixty-fifth year. Amongst all these ancient nations you have for so long a time been waging wars; and all this while—to say nothing of single cities—neither the Volsci joined with the Aequi, and all their powerful towns, nor all Etruria, with its enormous strength on land and water, and its occupancy of the entire breadth of Italy from sea to sea, has been a match for you in war. Since this is so, what a plague is the reason why you that have experienced these things should experiment with others? Granting that your valour may go elsewhere, yet surely the fortune of this place could not be taken along! Here is the Capitol, where men were told, when of old they discovered there a human head, that in that place should be the head of the world and the seat of empire; here, when the Capitol was being cleared with augural rites, Juventas and Terminus, to the vast joy of your fathers, refused to be removed; here are Vesta's fires, here the shields that were sent down from heaven, here are all the gods propitious, if you remain."

LIV. The speech of Camillus is said to have moved them, particularly where he touched upon religion; but the doubtful issue was resolved by a word

rem dubiam decrevit vox opportune emissa, quod cum senatus post paulo de his rebus in curia Hostilia haberetur cohortesque ex praesidiis revertentes forte agmine forum transirent, centurio in comitio exclamavit: "Signifer, statue signum; hic manebimus
 2 optime." Qua voce audita et senatus accipere se omen ex curia egressus conclamavit et plebs circumfusa adprobavit. Antiquata deinde lege promisce
 3 urbs aedificari coepta. Tegula publice praebita est; saxi materiaeque caedendae, unde quisque vellet ius factum praedibus acceptis eo anno aedificia perfectu-
 4 ros. Festinatio curam exemit vicos dirigendi, dum omisso sui alienique discrimine in vacuo aedificant.
 5 Ea est causa ut veteres cloacae, primo per publicum ductae, nunc privata passim subeant tecta, formaque urbis sit occupatae magis quam divisae similis.

BOOK V. LV. 1-5

that was let fall in the nick of time. It was B.C. 390
while the senate, a little later, was deliberating about these matters in the Curia Hostilia; some cohorts returning from guard-duty were marching through the Forum, and as they came to the Comitium a centurion cried out, "Standard-bearers, fix your ensign; here will be our best place to remain."
Hearing this sentence the senators came out from the Curia and shouted their acceptance of the omen,
and the commons gathering round them signified approval. The bill was then rejected, and people began in a random fashion to rebuild the City.
The state supplied tiles, and granted everybody the right to quarry stone and to hew timber where he liked, after giving security for the completion of the structures within that year. In their haste men were careless about making straight the streets,
and paying no attention to their own and others' rights, built on the vacant spaces. This is the reason that the ancient sewers, which were at first conducted through the public ways, at present frequently run under private dwellings, and the appearance of the City is like one where the ground has been appropriated rather than divided.

LIBRI V PERIOCHA

In obsidione Veiorum tabernacula¹ militibus facta sunt. Ea res cum esset nova, indignationem tribunorum plebis movit querentium non dari plebi nec per hiemem militiae requiem. Equites tum primum equis suis mereri coeperunt. Cum inundatio ex lacu Albano facta esset, vates qui eam rem interpretaretur ex hostibus captus est. Furius Camillus dictator X annis obsessos Veios cepit, simulacrum Iunonis² Romam transtulit, decimam praedae Delphos Apollini misit. Idem³ tribunus militum cum Faliscos obsideret, proditos hostium filios parentibus remisit statimque deditione facta Faliscorum victoriam iustitia consecutus est. Cum alter ex censoribus C. Iulius decessisset, in locum eius M. Cornelius suffectus est. Nec id postea factum est, quoniam eo lustro a Gallis Roma capta est. Furius Camillus, cum dies ei a L. Apuleio tribuno pl. dicta esset, in exilium abijt. Cum Galli Senones Clusium obsiderent et legati a senatu missi ad componendam inter eos et Clusinos pacem pugnantes contra Gallos starent in acie Clusinorum, hoc facto eorum concitati Senones urbem infesto exercitu petierunt, fuscisque ad Aliam Romanis cepere urbem praeter Capitolium, quo se iuventus contulerat; maiores natu cum insignibus honorum quos quisque gesserat in vestibulis aedium sedentes occiderunt. Et cum per aversam partem Capitoli iam in summum evasissent, proditi clangore anserum M. Manli praecipue opera

¹ tabernacula MSS: hibernacula Vascosanus (cf. V. xi.).

² Iunonis om. MSS.

³ Idem edito princeps: item MSS.

SUMMARY OF BOOK V

AT the siege of Veii winter quarters were constructed for the soldiers. This, being a new departure, stirred the ire of the tribunes of the plebs, who complained that the plebs were given no rest from warfare even in winter. The cavalry began then for the first time to serve on their own mounts. An inundation from the Alban Lake having occurred, a soothsayer was captured from the enemy that he might explain it. Furius Camillus the dictator captured Veii in a ten years' siege, transferred to Rome the image of Juno, and sent a tithe of the spoils to Apollo at Delphi. When the same man was besieging the Falisci as military tribune, he restored to their parents the sons of the enemy who had been betrayed, whereupon the Falisci surrendered and he obtained the victory by his justice. On the death of one of the censors, Gaius Julius, Marcus Cornelius was chosen to fill out his term, but this was never afterwards done because in that five-year period Rome was taken. Furius Camillus, having been cited for trial by the tribune Lucius Apuleius, a tribune of the plebs, went into exile. When the Gallic Senones were besieging Clusium and the envoys sent by the senate to arrange a peace between them and the Clusini fought in the army of the Clusini, the Senones were angered and marched to the attack of Rome. Defeating the Romans on the Allia they captured the City, all but the Capitol, in which the Romans of fighting age had taken refuge, and slew the elders, who, dressed in the insignia of the offices which they had held, were sitting in the vestibules of their houses. And when, climbing up on the other side of the Capitol, they had already come out on the top of it, they were betrayed by the gabbling of geese and—chiefly by the efforts of Marcus Manlius—were flung down. Later the deiecti ¹ sunt. Coactis deinde propter famem Romanis eo ² descendere ut M. pondo auri darent et hoc ³ pretio finem obsidionis emerent, Furius Camillus dictator absens creatus inter ipsum colloquium quo de pacis condicionibus agebatur cum exercitu venit et Gallos post sextum mensem urbe expulit ceciditque. Dictum est ad Veios migrandum esse propter incensam et dirutam urbem, quod consilium Camillo auctore discussum est. Movit populum vocis quoque omen ex centurione audita qui, cum in forum venisset, manipularibus suis dixerat: "Sta miles, hic optime manebimus." Aedis Iovi Capitolino facta est, quod ante urbem captam vox audita erat adventare Gallos.

LIBRI V PERIOCHA

¹ deiecti editio princeps: detecti MSS.

² eo inserted by Gronovius.

³ et hoc editio princeps: ut hoc MSS.

SUMMARY OF BOOK V

Romans were reduced so low by hunger as to offer a thousand pounds of gold and with this price to purchase an end of the siege. Furius Camillus, having been appointed dictator in his absence, came up with his army in the midst of this very conference about the terms of peace, and six months after their coming drove out the Gauls from Rome and cut them to pieces. Men said that they ought to remove to Veii because the City had been burned and overthrown, but this counsel was rejected, at the instance of Camillus. The people were moved also by the omen of certain words that a centurion was heard to utter, when having come into the Forum he said to his company : " Halt, soldiers, we shall do well to stop here." A temple was erected to Jupiter Capitolinus, because a voice had been heard before the capture of the City, which declared that the Gauls were coming.

BOOK VI

LIBER VI

C.P.C.
365

- I. QUAE ab condita urbe Roma ad captam eandem¹ Romani sub regibus primum, consulibus deinde ac dictatoribus decemvirisque ac tribunis consularibus gessere, foris bella, domi seditiones, 2 quinque libris exposui, res cum vetustate nimia obscuras, velut quae magno ex intervallo loci vix cernuntur, tum quod parvae et rarae per eadem tempora litterae fuere, una custodia fidelis memoriae rerum gestarum, et quod, etiam si quae in commentariis pontificum aliisque publicis privatisque erant monumentis, incensa urbe pleraeque interiere. 3 Clariora deinceps certioraque ab secunda origine velut ab stirpibus lactius feraciusque renatae urbis gesta domi militiaeque exponentur. 4 Ceterum primo quo adminiculo erecta erat eodem innixa M. Furio principe stetit, neque eum abdicare 5 se dictatura nisi anno circumacto passi sunt. Comititia in insequentem annum tribunos habere, quorum in magistratu capta urbs esset, non placuit; res ad

¹ eandem 5 Muretus: urbem eandem (or eandem urbem) Ω.

¹ Livy means the year (ending June 30th) for which the consular tribunes were elected whom Camillus, as dictator, superseded.

BOOK VI

I. THE history of the Romans from the founding B.C. 389 of the City of Rome to the capture of the same—at first under kings and afterwards under consuls and dictators, decemvirs and consular tribunes—their foreign wars and their domestic dissensions, I have set forth in five books, dealing with matters which are obscure not only by reason of their great antiquity - like far-off objects which can hardly be descried—but also because in those days there was but slight and scanty use of writing, the sole trustworthy guardian of the memory of past events, and because even such records as existed in the commentaries of the pontiffs and in other public and private documents, nearly all perished in the conflagration of the City. From this point onwards a clearer and more definite account shall be given of the City's civil and military history, when, beginning for a second time, it sprang up, as it were from the old roots, with a more luxuriant and fruitful growth.

Now it stood at first by leaning on the same support by which it had raised itself up, that is on Marcus Furius, its foremost citizen; neither would men suffer him to resign the dictatorship till the completion of the year.¹ That elections for the ensuing year should be held by the tribunes, in whose magistracy the City had been captured, was considered inadvisable, and the state reverted to an

- 6 interregnum rediit. Cum civitas in opere ac labore assiduo reficiendae urbis teneretur, interim Q. Fabio, simul primum magistratu abiit, ab Cn. Marcio tribuno plebis dicta dies est, quod in Gallos,¹ ad quos missus 7 erat orator, contra ius gentium pugnasset; cui iudicio eum mors, adeo opportuna ut voluntariam 8 magna pars crederet, subtraxit. Interregnum initum: P. Cornelius Scipio interrex et post eum
 M. Furius Camillus.² Is tribunos militum consulari potestate creat L. Valerium³ Publicolam iterum L.
 Verginium P. Cornelium A. Manlium L. Aemilium
 L. Postumium.
- 9 Hi ex interregno cum extemplo magistratum
 inissent, nulla de re prius quam de religionibus 10 senatum consulere. In primis foedera ac leges—erant autem eae duodecim tabulae et quaedam regiae leges—conquiri, quae comparerent,⁴ iusserunt. Alia ex eis edita etiam in vulgus: quae autem ad sacra pertinebant, a pontificibus maxime ut religione obstrictos haberent multitudinis animos 11 suppressa. Tum de diebus religiosis agitari coeptum, diemque a. d. XV Kal. Sextiles, duplici clade insignem, quo die ad Cremeram Fabii caesi, quo deinde ad Alliam cum exitio urbis foede pugnatum, a posteriore clade Alliensem appellarunt reique⁵ nullius

¹ in Gallos Cobel; legatus (-tos Ot: -tis E) Ω .

² Camillus Duker; camillus iterum Ω .

³ L. Valerium Glareanus, Sigonius (v. xxvi. 2, vi. v. 7):
 a ualerium P²FUBt: ā ualerium VOEHL: am ualerium M: ualerium DA: m. ualerium A¹ (αἰλον Diod. xv. xxii).

⁴ comparerent A³ς: non comparerent V: comparerent (comparare B) Ω .

⁵ reique Karsten: insignemque rei (A adds publice) Ω .

¹ On July 6th at the earliest.

interregnum. While the citizens were engrossed in unremitting toil and labour to restore the City, Quintus Fabius had no sooner quitted his magistracy than he was indicted by Gnaeus Marcius, a tribune of the plebs, on the ground of his having fought in violation of the law of nations against the Gauls, to whom he had been sent as an envoy—a trial which he escaped by a death so opportune that the majority believed it voluntary. The interregnum began: Publius Cornelius Scipio was interrex; and after him Marcus Furius Camillus, who effected the election, as tribunes of the soldiers with consular authority, of Lucius Valerius Publicola (for the second time) Lucius Verginius, Publius Cornelius, Aulus Manlius, Lucius Aemilius, and Lucius Postumius.

Having, immediately¹ after the interregnum, entered upon their term, they consulted the senate before everything else on questions of religious observance. Among the first decrees they passed was one for searching out the treaties and laws—to wit, the twelve tables and certain laws of the kings,—so far as they could be discovered. Some of these were made accessible even to the common people, but such as dealt with sacred rites were kept private by the pontiffs, chiefly that they might hold the minds of the populace in subjection through religious fear. Then they proceeded to deliberate about days of evil omen. The 18th of July was notorious for a double misfortune, since it was on that day that the Fabii were massacred at the Cremera and that subsequently the rout at the Allia occurred, which resulted in the destruction of the City. From the latter disaster they named it the Day of the Allia, and forbade any public or

A.U.C. 12 publice privatimque agenda fecerunt. Quidam, 365 quod postridie Idus Quintiles non litasset Sulpicius tribunus militum neque inventa pace deum post diem tertium obiectus hosti exercitus Romanus esset, etiam postridie Idus rebus divinis supersederi
 iussum; inde, ut postridie Kalendas quoque ac
 Nonas eadem religio esset, traditum putant.

II. Nec diu licuit quietis consilia erigendae ex
 2 tam gravi casu rei publicae secum agitare. Hinc Volsci, veteres hostes, ad extinguendum nomen Romanum arma ceperant: hinc Etruriae principum
 ex omnibus populis coniurationem de bello ad fanum
 3 Voltumnae factam mercatores adferebant. Novus quoque terror accesserat defectione Latinorum Hernicorumque, qui post pugnam ad lacum Regil-lum factum per annos prope centum nunquam ambigua fide in amicitia populi Romani fuerant.
 4 Itaque cum tanti undique terrores circumstarent appareretque omnibus non odio solum apud hostes
 sed contemptu etiam inter socios nomen Romanum 5 laborare, placuit eiusdem auspiciis defendi rem publicam cuius recuperata¹ esset, dictatoremque 6 dici M. Furium Camillum. Is dictator C. Servilium Ahalam magistrum equitum dixit, iustitioque indicto dilectum iuniorum habuit ita ut seniores quoque,

¹ recuperata, Walters and Conway (cf. their note on I. xii. 1): recuperata Ω.

private business to be done that day. Some think, p.c. 389 because Sulpicius had, on the day after the Ides of July, made an unacceptable sacrifice, and, without having gained the divine approval, had two days later exposed the Roman army to the enemy, that therefore religious rites were omitted also on the days after the several Ides: and that afterwards it became traditional that the morrow after Kalends and Nones should likewise be avoided, from the same scruple.

II. But the Romans were not left long to the peaceful consideration of plans for raising their state after its grievous fall. On the one hand the Volsci, their ancient foes, had armed for the purpose of extinguishing the Roman name: on the other, merchants brought word from Etruria that the leading men of all her nations had met at the shrine of Voltumna and conspired to make war. A fresh alarm, too, was occasioned by the revolt of the Latins and the Hernici, who since the battle fought at Lake Regillus had continued for close upon a hundred years, with unquestioned loyalty, in the friendship of the Roman People. And so, when such dangers threatened them on every side, and it was clear to all that the name of Rome was not only held in hatred by her enemies, but even in contempt by her allies, it was resolved that the republic should be defended under the same auspices under which it had been redeemed and that Marcus Furius Camillus should be named dictator. Being appointed dictator he designated Gaius Servilius Ahala master of the horse, and after proclaiming a cessation of legal business, held a levy of the juniors, yet without excluding such of the older men as still quibus aliquid roboris superesset, in verba sua iuratos centuriaret.

- 7 Exercitum conscriptum armatumque trifariam divisit. Partem unam in agro Veiente Etruriae opposuit, alteram ante urbem castra locare iussit;
 8 tribuni militum his A. Manlius, illis, qui adversus Etruscos mittebantur, L. Aemilius praepositus; tertiam partem ipse ad Volscos duxit nec procul a Lanuvio — ad Mecium is locus dicitur — castra
 9 oppugnare est adortus. Quibus ab contemptu, quod prope omnem deletam a Gallis Romanam iuventutem crederent, ad bellum profectis tantum Camillus auditus imperator terroris intulerat ut vallo se ipsi, vallum congestis arboribus saepirent, ne qua intrare
 10 ad munimenta hostis posset. Quod ubi animadvertit Camillus, ignem in obiectam saepem coici iussit; et forte erat vis magna venti versa in hostem;
 11 itaque non aperuit solum incendio viam, sed flammis in castra tendentibus vapore etiam ac fumo crepituque viridis materiae flagrantis ita consternavit hostes ut minor moles superantibus vallum militibus munitum ¹ in castra Volscorum Romanis fuerit quam transcendentibus saepem incendio absumptam fuerat.
 12 Fuis hostibus caesisque cum castra impetu cepisset dictator, praedam militi dedit, quo minus speratam

¹ vallum militibus munitum V: nullum Ω.

possessed any vigour, to whom also he administered the oath and mustered them into centuries. B.C. 389

Having enrolled the army and equipped it, he divided it into three parts. One division he stationed in the Veientine district to confront Etruria; a second he ordered to encamp before the City. These divisions were put under the command of military tribunes, Aulus Manlius for the home troops, Lucius Aemilius for those which were being dispatched against the Etruscans. The third division he led himself against the Volsci, and not far from Lanuvium—ad Mecium the place is called—advanced to attack their camp. The enemy had gone to war from a feeling of contempt for the Romans, believing that their fighting strength had been nearly wiped out by the Gauls, but merely on hearing that Camillus was their general, they were so terrified that they protected themselves with a rampart and the rampart with a barricade of logs, that the Romans might nowhere be able to penetrate to their defences. On perceiving this, Camillus ordered his men to throw fire on the barrier. It so happened that there was a high wind blowing towards the enemy, which not only caused the blaze to open a path, but what with the flames making towards the camp, and the heat and smoke and the crackling of the green wood, so alarmed the enemy, that the Roman soldiers experienced less difficulty in scaling the fortifications of the Volscian camp than they had met with in crossing the burnt barricade. Having routed and slain his enemies and taken their camp by assault, the dictator gave the booty to his soldiers, an act which, coming unexpectedly from a commander who

A.U.C. 13 minime largitore duce, eo militi gratiorem. Per-365 secutus deinde fugientes cum omnem Volscum
 agrum depopulatus esset, ad deditionem Volscos 14 septuagesimo demum anno subegit. Victor ex Volseis in Aequos transiit et ipsos bellum molientes;
 exercitum eorum ad Bolas oppressit, nec castra modo sed urbem etiam adgressus impetu primo cepit.

III. Cum in ea parte in qua caput rei Romanae
 Camillus erat ea fortuna esset, aliam in partem terror
 2 ingens ingruerat. Etruria prope omnis armata Sutrium, socios populi Romani, obsidebat; quorum legati opem rebus adfectis orantes cum senatum
 adissent, decretum tulere ut dictator primo quoque 3 tempore auxilium Sutrinis ferret. Cuius spei moram cum pati fortuna obsessorum non potuisset confectaue paucitas oppidanorum opere, vigiliis, volne-ribus, quae semper eisdem urgebant, per pactionem
 urbe hostibus tradita inermis cum singulis emissa vestimentis miserabili agmine penates relinqueret, 4 eo forte tempore Camillus cum exercitu Romano intervenit. Cui cum se maesta turba ad pedes provolvisset principumque orationem necessitate ultima expressam fletus mulierum ac puerorum, qui exsilii
 comites trahebantur, excepisset, parcere lamentis

¹ Writing of Tarquinius Superbus, Livy says (I. liii. 2) that he began a war with the Volsci which was to last more than two hundred years after his time. It is not known where he could have found the seventy years tradition.

was by no means open-handed, was all the more B.C. 389 acceptable to the men. Then after pursuing the fugitives and laying waste all the Volscian countryside, he forced the Volsci to surrender at last, after seventy years of war.¹ The victor, leaving the Volsci, crossed over to the Aequi, who were themselves making preparations for war; their army he surprised at Bolae, and carried not only their camp but their city, too, at the first assault.

III. While affairs were thus prosperous in that region where Camillus commanded for Rome, in another direction a great danger threatened. Well-nigh the whole of Etruria was in arms and was laying siege to Sutrium, an ally of the Roman People. Envoys of the Sutrines had appeared before the senate to beg for assistance in their distress, and had obtained a decree that the dictator should march to the aid of their people at the earliest opportunity. But the plight of the besieged would not admit of their waiting till this hope was realized; and the population of the little town, exhausted with the labour, guard-mounting, and wounds, which fell always to the lot of the same men, had come to terms, and having surrendered their city to the enemy, were leaving their homes in a sad procession, unarmed and with but a single garment each, when, as it chanced, Camillus appeared on the scene with a Roman army. The disconsolate rabble cast themselves at his feet, while their leading men addressed him with words drawn from them by the direst necessity and accompanied by the wailing of the women and children, who were being dragged along as the companions of their exile. He bade the Sutrines spare their lamentations; the Etruscans

Sutrinos iussit: Etruscis se luctum lacrimasque
 5 ferre. Sarcinas inde deponi Sutrinosque ibi con-siderare modico praesidio relicto, arma secum militem ferre iubet. Ita expedito exercitu profectus ad Sutrium, id quod rebatur, soluta omnia rebus, ut fit, secundis invenit, nullam stationem ante moenia,
 patentes portas, victorem vagum praedam ex ho-
 6 stium tectis egerentem. Iterum igitur eodem die Sutrium capitur; victores Etrusci passim trucidantur ab novo hoste, nec se conglobandi coeundique in 7 unum aut arma capiundi datur spatium. Cum pro se quisque tenderent ad portas, si qua forte se in agros eicere possent, clausas — id enim primum 8 dictator imperaverat — portas inveniunt. Inde alii arma capere, alii, quos forte armatos tumultus occupaverat, convocare suos ut proelium inirent; quod accensum ab desperatione hostium fuisset, ni praecones per urbem dimissi poni arma et parci inermi iussissent nec praeter armatos quemquam violari.
 9 Tum etiam quibus animi in spe ultima obstinati ad
 decertandum fuerant, postquam data spes vitae est, iactare passim arma inermesque, quod tutius fortuna 10 fecerat, se hosti offerre. Magna multitudo in custowere those to whom he was bringing grief and tears. B.C. 380

 He then gave orders that the packs should be set down; that the Sutrines should stop there, with a small guard which he left them; and that his soldiers should take their weapons and follow him. So, with his army in light marching order, he set out for Sutrium, where he was not surprised to find everything at loose ends, as a consequence—common enough—of their success; there was no outpost before the walls; the gates were open; and the victors had dispersed and were fetching the booty out of the houses of their enemies. For the second time, therefore, on the same day, Sutrium was captured. The victorious Etruscans were everywhere slaughtered by the new enemy, and had no time given them to assemble and unite their forces or to arm. As they tried, every man for himself, to reach the gates, if by chance they might somehow escape out into the fields, they found them shut, for so the general had ordered in the beginning. After that some caught up their swords; others, whom the sudden attack had found already armed, tried to call their fellows together for a battle, and this would have been hotly fought, because of the enemy's despair, had not heralds been dispatched through the town who made proclamation that arms should be laid down and the unarmed receive quarter, and that none should suffer any violence except those that carried weapons. Then even such as had in their extremity resolved to fight to the death, now that hope of life was held out to them, began everywhere to throw down their swords, and to go unarmed—for fortune had made this the safer way—to meet their enemies. The dias divisa ; oppidum ante noctem redditum Sutrinis inviolatum integrumque ab omni clade belli, quia non vi captum sed traditum per condiciones fuerat.

A.U.C.
365

A.U.C.
366

- IV. Camillus in urbem triumphans rediit trium simul
 2 bellorum victor. Longe plurimos captivos ex Etru-scis ante currum duxit, quibus sub hasta venundatis tantum aeris redactum est ut, pretio pro auro ma-tronis persoluto, ex eo quod supererat tres paterae
 3 aureae factae sint, quas cum titulo nominis Camilli ante Capitolium incensum in Iovis cella constat ante pedes Iunonis positas fuisse.
- 4 Eo anno in civitatem accepti qui Veientium Capenatiumque ac Faliscorum per ea bella transfugerant ad Romanos, agerque his novis civibus
 5 adsignatus. Revocati quoque in urbem senatus consulto a Veiiis, qui aedificandi Romae pigritia occupatis ibi vacuis tectis Veios se contulerant. Et primo fremitus fuit aspernantium imperium ; dies deinde praestituta capitalisque poena, qui non remigrasset Roman, ex ferocibus universis singulos, metu 6 suo quemque, oboedientes fecit. Et Roma cum frequentia crescere, tum tota simul exurgere aedificiis et re publica impensas adiuvante et aedilibus velut publicum exigentibus opus et ipsis privatis---

¹ A sign that booty was to be sold at auction.

² See v. i. 6-7.

³ July 6th, 83 B.C. The restoration of the temple was completed 69 B.C.

BOOK VI. III. 10-IV. 6

great throng was divided among companies of guards; and before night the town was restored to the Sutrines, unharmed and without scathe of war, because it had not been carried by assault, but had been surrendered upon terms. B.C. 389

IV. Camillus returned to the City and triumphed B.C. 388 for his victories in three simultaneous wars. By far the greatest number of the captives led before his chariot were Etruscans; they were sold under the spear,¹ and fetched so large a sum that after the matrons had been repaid for their gold,² the surplus sufficed to make three golden bowls, which were inscribed, as is well known, with the name of Camillus, and kept, until the burning of the Capitol,³ in the chapel of Jupiter, at Juno's feet.

This year were received into the state such of the Veientes, Capenates, and Faliscans as had come over to the Romans in the course of these wars, and lands were allotted to these new citizens. There were also recalled from Veii to the City, by senatorial decree, those who being too indolent to build in Rome had taken possession of empty houses in Veii and had gone there to live. They had indeed murmured at first, and had flouted the order; but the designation of a day and the threat of a capital penalty for failure to return to Rome reduced them from a defiant group to obedient individuals, as each became alarmed for himself. Rome was now growing in numbers, and in every part at once new buildings were springing up; the state contributed towards the costs, and the aediles forwarded the work as though it had been public business, while the citizens themselves, incited by their desire to be admonebat enim desiderium usus — festinantibus ad effectum operis; intraque annum nova urbs stetit.

- 7 Exitu anni comitia tribunorum militum consulari potestate habita. Creati T. Quinctius Cincinnatus Q. Servilius Fidenas quintum L. Iulius Iulus¹ L. Aquilius Corvus L. Lucretius Tricipitinus Ser.² Sulpicius Rufus. Exercitum alterum in Aequos, non ad bellum — victos namque se fatebantur — sed ab odio ad pervastandos fines, ne quid ad nova consilia relinqueretur virium, duxere, alterum in agrum Tarquiniensem; ibi oppida Etruscorum Cortuosa et Contenebra vi capta. Ad Cortuosam nihil certaminis fuit: improvise adorti primo clamore atque impetu cepere; direptum oppidum atque incensum est.
- 10 Contenebra paucos dies oppugnationem sustinuit, laborque continuus, non die non nocte remissus, subegit eos. Cum in sex partes divisus exercitus Romanus senis horis in orbem succederet proelio, oppidanos eosdem integro semper certamini paucitas fessos obiceret, cessere tandem, locusque invadendi
- 11 urbem Romanis datus est. Publicari praedam tribunis placebat; sed imperium quam consilium segnius fuit; dum cunctantur, iam militum praeda erat nec nisi per invidiam adimi poterat.
- 12 Eodem anno, ne privatis tantum operibus cresceret urbs, Capitolium quoque saxo quadrato substructum

¹ L. Iulius Iulus Sigon. (C.I.L. i², p. 116): l. iulius VM: iulius. l. PFB: iulius U: iulius tullius OE¹L³A: iulius tullius l E: iullus tullius HTD: iullus tullus L: lucius iulius A².

² Servius A²5: servilius (cf. Diod. xv. xxiii. 1) Ω.

BOOK VI. IV. 6-12

using it, hurried their building to a conclusion; B.C. 385
and within the year there was a new City standing.

At the close of the year an election of military tribunes with consular powers was held. Those chosen were Titus Quinctius Cincinnatus, Quintus Servilius Fidenas (for the fifth time), Lucius Julius Iulus, Lucius Aquilius Corvus, Lucius Lucretius Tricipitinus, and Servius Sulpicius Rufus. These men led one army against the Aequi, not to war—for they confessed themselves vanquished—but from hatred, in order to waste their territories and leave them with no strength to make new trouble; with another they invaded the district of Tarquinii, where they captured by assault the Etruscan towns Cortuosa and Contenebra. At Cortuosa there was no struggle: in a surprise attack they carried the place at the first shout and onset, and then sacked and burned it. Contenebra held out for a few days, but the continuous fighting, without respite either day or night, overcame them. The Roman army had been divided into six corps, of which each in its turn went into battle for six hours; while the townsmen were so few that the same men were exposed to an attack that was constantly renewed, until at last they gave way and afforded the Romans an opening to enter the City. The tribunes decided that the booty should go to the state, but were less prompt in issuing orders than in planning; and, while they procrastinated, it was already in the hands of the soldiers and could not be taken away without offending them.

That same year, that the City might not grow in private buildings only, the Capitol was provided with a substructure of hewn stone, a work which even

A.U.C.
366

est, opus vel in hac magnificentia urbis conspiciendum.

A.U.C.
367

V. Iam et tribuni plebis civitate aedificando occupata contiones suas frequentare legibus agrariis 2 conabantur. Ostentabatur in spem Pomptinus ager, tum primum post accisas a Camillo Volscorum res 3 possessionis haud ambiguae. Criminabantur multo eum infestiores agrum ab nobilitate esse, quam a Volscis fuerit; ab illis enim tantum, quoad vires et 4 arma habuerint,¹ incursiones eo factas; nobiles homines in possessionem agri publici grassari, nec, nisi antequam omnia praecipiant divisus sit, locum 5 ibi plebi fore. Haud magno opere plebem moverunt² et infrequentem in foro propter aedificandi curam et eodem exhaustam impensis eoque agri immemorem, ad quem instruendum vires non essent.

6 In civitate plena religionum, tunc etiam ab recenti clade superstitiosis principibus, ut renovarentur auspicia res ad interregnum rediit. Interreges deinceps M. Manlius Capitolinus, Ser. Sulpicius Camerinus, 7 L. Valerius Potitus. Hic demum tribunorum militum consulari potestate comitia habuit; L. Papirium C. Cornelium C. Sergium L. Aemilium iterum L.

¹ habuerint Madvig: habuerunt Ω .

² moverunt Madvig: mouerant (or -rat) Ω : moueunt M: mouent *M*² (or *M*¹).

amidst the present splendours of the City is deserving of remark. B.C. 388

V. And now, while the citizens were taken up B.C. 387 with building, the tribunes of the plebs were trying to attract crowds to their meetings by proposals for agrarian laws. They held out hopes of the Pomptine district, of which the Romans had then for the first time—since the defeat inflicted on the Volsci by Camillus—acquired undisputed control. The tribunes brought the charge that this district was worse plagued by the nobility than it had been by the Volsci; for the latter, as long as they were strong enough and had arms, had done no more than make incursions into it; but the nobles were taking violent possession of the public domain, and unless it should be parcelled out before they seized it all, there would be no room there for the commons. They made no great impression on the plebs, who were seldom in the Forum, because they were so intent on building, and, exhausted with the expense thereby incurred, had no thought of land, which they lacked the means of stocking.

The citizens were much given to religious fears, and at that time, owing to the recent calamity, even the leaders were a prey to superstition; so, in order that new auspices might be had, the state went into an interregnum. The office of interrex was successively held by Marcus Manlius Capitolinus, Servius Sulpicius Camerinus, and Lucius Valerius Potitus. Finally, the last-named held an election of military tribunes and announced that the choice had fallen on Lucius Papirius, Gaius Cornelius, Gaius Sergius, Lucius Aemilius (for the second time), Lucius

A.U.C.
367

Menenium¹ L. Valerium Publicolam tertium creat; ii² ex interregno magistratum occepere.

Eo anno aedis Martis Gallico bello vota dedicata
8 est a T. Quinctio duumviro sacris faciendis. Tribus quattuor ex novis civibus additae, Stellatina Tro-mentina Sabatina Arniensis; eaeque viginti quinque tribuum numerum explevere.

A.U.C.
368

VI. De agro Pomptino ab L. Sicinio tribuno plebis actum ad frequentiore iam populum mobilioreinque
2 ad cupiditatem agri quam fuerat. Et de Latino Hernicoque bello mentio facta in senatu maioris
belli cura, quod Etruria in armis erat, dilata est.

3 Res ad Camillum tribunum militum consulari potestate rediit; collegae additi quinque: Ser. Cornelius Maluginensis Q. Servilius Fidenas sextum L. Quinctius Cincinnatus L. Horatius Pulvillus P.
4 Valerius. Principio anni aversae curae hominum sunt a bello Etrusco, quod fugientium ex agro Pomptino agmen repente inlatum in urbem attulit
Antiates in armis esse Latinorumque populos iuven-5 tutein suam summisisse³ ad id bellum, eo abnuentes publicum fuisse consilium quod non prohibitos tan-tummodo voluntarios dicerent militare ubi vellent.

¹ C. Cornelium C. Sergium L. Aemilium iterum L. Menenium Sigonius: Cn. Sergium L. Aemilium iterum Licinium Menenium (H. omits L. Aemilium Menenium) Ω.

² creat; ii Alschefski: creat (or creati) hii (or hi) Ω.

³ suam summisisse ζ: summisisse (but H. has sub- and various MSS. misspell -misisse) Ω: suam misisse *VMA*² “antiqua lectio” Rhenanus.

¹ The duumviri had charge of the Sibylline Books, which they were directed to consult in times of stress to ascertain what expiation Heaven demanded for the sins of the people.

Menenius and Lucius Valerius Publicola (for the B.C. 387 third time). These men took office at the conclusion of the interregnum.

In that year the temple of Mars vowed in the Gallic war was dedicated by Titus Quinctius, duumvir for sacrifices.¹ Four additional tribes were formed out of the new citizens, the Stellatina, Tromentina, Sabatina, and Arniensis; these filled up the number of tribes to twenty-five.

VI. The question of the Pomptine territory was B.C. 386 brought up by Lucius Sicinius, a tribune of the plebs, in popular meetings which were now more numerous attended, and by men more easily induced to covet land, than had been the case before. The senate talked also of war with the Latins and the Hernici, but dread of a greater war Etruria being up in arms—caused them to defer it.

The government passed to Camillus, as tribune of the soldiers with consular authority. He was given five colleagues: Servius Cornelius Maluginensis, Quintus Servilius Fidenas (for a sixth term), Lucius Quinctius Cincinnatus, Lucius Horatius Pulvillus, and Publius Valerius. Early in the year the general concern was diverted from the Etruscan war, when a band of fugitives from the Pomptine district suddenly appeared in Rome with tidings that the Antiates were in arms. The Latin communities, so they reported, had sent their soldiers to help in the war, but asserted that their government was not involved, since they had merely, as they said, not forbidden their young men to serve, as volunteers, where they liked.

Their number was raised to ten in 367 B.C. and later (in 51 B.C.) to fifteen.

A.U.C.
368

- 6 Desierant iam ulla contemni bella. Itaque senatus dis agere gratias quod Camillus in magistratu esset: dictatorem quippe dicendum eum fuisse si privatus esset; et collegae fateri regimen omnium rerum, ubi quid bellici terroris ingruat, in viro uno esse, sibi que destinatum id animo¹ esse Camillo summittere imperium, nec quicquam de maiestate sua detractum credere quod maiestati eius viri concessissent. Conlaudatis ab senatu tribunis et ipse
- 8 Camillus confusus animo gratias egit. Ingens inde ait onus a populo Romano sibi, qui se² iam quartum creasset, magnum a senatu talibus de se iudiciis³ maximum tam honoratorum⁴ collegarum obsequio
- 9 iniungi. Itaque si quid laboris vigiliarumque adici possit, certantem secum ipsum adniscurum ut tanto de se consensu civitatis opinionem, quae maxima sit, etiam constantem efficiat. Quod ad bellum atque
- 10 Antiates attineat, plus ibi minarum quam periculi esse; se tamen, ut nihil timendi, sic nihil contem-
- 11 nendiauctorem esse. Circumsederi urbem Romanam ab invidia et odio finitimorum; itaque et ducibus pluribus et exercitibus administrandam rem publicam
- 12 esse. "Te" inquit, "P. Valeri,⁵ socium imperii consilii que legiones mecum adversus Antiatem hostem ducere placet; te, Q. Servili, altero exercitu

¹ id animo V: in animo Ω: animo L.² se Madvig: se dictatorem Ω.³ iudiciis Karsten: iudiciis eius ordinis Ω: iudiciis concordii U.⁴ honoratorum Ald.: honorato V γ: honoratum (honor-BHT) Ω.⁵ P. Valeri γ (cf. § 3): L. Valeri Ω.

BOOK VI. vi. 6-13

The Romans had ceased by this time to make light B.C. 386 of any wars. And so the senate gave thanks to the gods that Camillus was in office, for in sooth they would have been obliged to make him dictator, if he had been a private citizen; and his colleagues declared that the general control, when any warlike danger threatened, belonged to one man alone, and that they were resolved to subordinate their own authority to Camillus; nor did they believe that there was any derogation of their own dignity in such concessions as they might make to his. The senate commended the tribunes, and Camillus himself, deeply moved, expressed his thanks. A heavy responsibility he said, was placed upon him by the Roman People, who had now elected him for the fourth time; no small one by the senate, in so judging of him; but the greatest of all proceeded from the deference accorded him by such distinguished colleagues. Accordingly, if it were possible to add to his exertions and his vigilance, he should vie with himself in an effort to make the very high opinion which his fellow citizens so unanimously entertained of him an abiding one. As for the war with the men of Antium, there was more bluster in that quarter than real danger; nevertheless, as he would have them fear nothing, so he would counsel them to despise nothing. The City of Rome was ringed about by the envy and ill-will of her neighbours; consequently there needed several generals and armies to administer the interests of the state. "It is my wish," said he, "that you, Publius Valerius, should share my authority and deliberations, and join me in leading the legions against the enemy at Antium; that you, Quintus Servilius, should organize

A.U.C.
368

- instructo paratoque ad urbem¹ castra habere, intentum, sive Etruria se interim, ut nuper, sive nova haec cura, Latini atque Hernici moverint; pro certo habeo ita rem gesturum, ut patre avo teque
- 14 ipso ac sex tribunatibus dignum est. Tertius exercitus ex causariis senioribusque a L. Quinctio² scribatur, qui urbi moenibusque praesidio sit. L. Horatius arma, tela, frumentum quaeque alia belli
- 15 tempora poscent provideat. Te, Ser. Corneli, praesidem huius publici consilii, custodem religionum, comitiorum, legum, rerum omnium urbanarum collegae facimus."
- 16 Cunctis in partes muneris sui benigne pollicentibus operam, Valerius, socius imperii lectus, adiecit M. Furium sibi pro dictatore seque ei pro magistro
- 17 equitum futurum; proinde, quam opinionem de unico imperatore, eam spem de bello haberent. Se vero bene sperare patres et de bello et de pace
- 18 universaque re publica erecti gaudio fremunt, nec dictatore unquam opus fore rei publicae, si tales viros in magistratu habeat, tam concordibus iunctos animis, parere atque imperare iuxta paratos laudemque conferentes potius in medium quam ex communi ad se trahentes.

VII. Iustitio indicto dilectuque habito Furius ac

¹ ad urbem V: in urbem A: in urbe Ω.

² a L. Quinctio ς (cf § 3); ab quinctio V; a tito quinctio Ω: attito quinctio L.

and equip a second army, and maintain your camp B.C. 386
 near Rome, on the alert, in case any move should be made in the meantime from Etruria, as happened recently, or from this new source of anxiety, the Latins and Hernici; certain I am that you will discharge the commission in a manner worthy of your father, your grandfather, and yourself, and of your six tribuneships. Let a third army be enrolled by Lucius Quinctius, out of those who are invalided or over age, to defend the City and the walls. Let Lucius Horatius provide arms, missiles, corn, and what else the exigencies of the war demand. You, Servius Cornelius, we, your colleagues, appoint to be president of this state council, guardian of religious rites, of the elections, the laws, and all the affairs of the City."

All promised loyally to do their best in their respective departments of their office; and Valerius, who had been selected to share in the command, added that he should regard Marcus Furius as a dictator and himself as his master of the horse; in proportion therefore to men's confidence in their unique commander should be their hopes of the outcome of the war. Whereat the senators in their enthusiasm shouted that they hoped right well of the war, and of the peace, and of the common weal in general; adding that the state would never need a dictator if it might have such men in office, united in such loving concord, equally ready to command and obey, and rather contributing to the common stock of glory than drawing upon it for their own behoof.

VII. After proclaiming a suspension of legal business and holding a levy, Furius and Valerius set Valerius ad Satricum profecti, quo non Volscorum modo iuventutem Antiates ex nova subole lectam sed ingentem Latinorum Hernicorumque vim¹ conciverant ex integerrimis diutina pace populis. Itaque novus hostis veteri adiunctus commovit animos militis Romani. Quod ubi aciem iam instruenti Camillo centuriones renuntiaverunt, turbatas militum mentes esse, segniter arma capta, cunctabundosque et resistentes egressos castris esse, quin voces quoque auditas cum centenis hostibus singulos pugnatu-

 2 et aegre inermem tantam multitudinem, nedum
 3 armatam, sustineri posse, in equum insilit et ante signa obversus in aciem ordines interequitans :

“Quae tristitia, milites, haec, quae insolita cunctatio est? Hostem an me an vos ignoratis? Hostis est quid aliud quam perpetua materia virtutis glori-
 4 aequae vestrae? Vos contra me duce, ut Falerios Veiosque captos et in capta patria Gallorum legiones caesas taceam, modo trigeminae victoriae triplicem triumphum ex his ipsis Volscis et Aequis² et ex
 5 Etruria egistis. An me, quod non dictator vobis sed tribunus signum dedi, non agnoscitis ducem? Neque ego maxima imperia in vos desidero, et vos in me nihil praeter me ipsum intueri decet; neque out for Satricum, where the Antiates had collected not only the fighting men of the Volsci, recruited from a new generation,¹ but also a large force of Latins and Hernici, nations which, having been long at peace, were extremely strong. The consequence of this addition of new enemies to their old ones was to trouble the spirit of the Roman soldiers. But when the centurions reported to Camillus, as he was already drawing up his line, that the men were demoralized; that they had been loath to arm and had hesitated and delayed in leaving the camp, nay, that some had even been heard to say that they would be one against a hundred in the battle, and that so great a host could hardly be withstood even though unarmed, much less when provided with weapons—being told of this, I say, Camillus vaulted upon his horse, and riding along the ranks in front of the standards, faced his troops and thus addressed them:

¹ Hernicorumque vim Malvig: hernicorumque Ω.

² et Aequis Ω: ex Aequis Hausinger: et ex Aequis, H. J. Mueller.

¹ i.e., since the disastrous defeat they had suffered in 389 (chap. ii. § 12).

“Soldiers, what means this gloom and this unwonted reluctance? Are you strangers to the enemy, or to me, or to yourselves? The enemy—what else are they but inexhaustible material for you to fashion into glorious deeds of valour? As for yourselves, when acting as my soldiers, though I say nothing of your capturing Falerii and Veii and routing the Gallic legions in your captured City, you celebrated, only the other day, a three-fold triumph for a triple victory over these very Volsci and Aequi and over Etruria. Or is it that I, having given you the signal not as dictator but as tribune of the soldiers, am not recognized as your commander? And yet neither do I desire supreme authority over you, nor ought you to regard in me anything but myself; for enim dictatura mihi unquam animos fecit, ut ne 6 exsilium quidem ademit. Iidem igitur omnes sumus, et cum eadem omnia in hoc bellum adferamus, quae

 in priora attulimus, eundem eventum belli exspectemus. Simul concurreritis, quod quisque didicit ac consuevit faciet: vos vincetis, illi fugient."

VIII. Dato deinde signo ex equo desilit et proximum signiferum manu arreptum secum in hostem
 2 rapit "Infer, miles," clamitans "signum." Quod ubi videre, ipsum Camillum, iam ad munera corporis senecta invalidum, vadentem in hostes, procurrunt pariter omnes clamore sublato "Sequere impera-3 torem" pro se quisque clamantes. Emissum etiam signum Camilli iussu in hostium aciem ferunt, idque 4 ut repeteretur concitatos antesignanos; ibi primum pulsum Antiatem, terroremque non in primam tan-5 tum aciem sed etiam ad subsidiarios perlatum. Nec vis tantum militum movebat excitata praesentia ducis, sed quod Volscorum animis nihil terribilius 6 erat quam ipsius Camilli forte oblata species; ita quocumque se intulisset victoriam secum haud dubiam trahebat. Maxime id evidens fuit, cum in laevum cornu prope iam pulsum arrepto repente equo cum scuto pedestri advectus conspectu suo proelium restituit ostentans vincentem ceteram
 7 aciem. Iam inclinata res erat, sed turba hostium

BOOK VI. VII. 5-VIII. 7

"The Government could never give me resolution, nor as we could ever expect to do so. We are all there - here, exactly as we are, and since we bring the same qualities in all respects to the campaign that we brought to our previous, let us look forward to the same result. As soon as you have joined battle every man will see what he has learned and has become accustomed to. You will conquer, they will run away."

[illegible]

et fuga impediabatur¹ et longa caede conficienda multitudo tanta fesso militi erat, cum repente ingentibus procellis fusus imber certam magis victoriam quam proelium diremit. Signo deinde receptui dato nox insecuta quietis Romanis perfecit bellum. Latini namque et Hernici relictis Volscis domos profecti sunt, malis consiliis pares adepti eventus; Volsci, ubi se desertos ab eis videre, quorum fiducia rebellaverant, relictis castris moenibus Satrici se includunt. Quos primo Camillus vallo circumdare et aggere atque operibus oppugnare est adortus. Quae postquam nulla eruptione impediri videt, minus esse animi ratus in hoste quam ut in eo tam lentae spei victoriam exspectaret, cohortatus milites, ne tamquam Veios oppugnantes in opere longinquo sese tererent, victoriam in manibus esse, ingenti militum alacritate moenia undique adgressus scalis oppidum cepit. Volsci abiectis armis sese dediderunt.

IX. Ceterum animus ducis rei maiori, Antio, imminebat: id caput Volscorum, eam fuisse originem proximi belli. Sed quia nisi magno apparatu, tormentis machinisque, tam valida urbs capi non poterat, relicto ad exercitum collega Romam est profectus,

¹ fuga impediabatur HTLR: fuga im(or in-)pediebat Ω : fugam impediabat ς .

but the enemy's numbers were an obstacle even to B.C. 386 their flight, and a great multitude remained for the weary soldiers to dispatch with long-drawn massacre, when suddenly great gusts of wind brought on a downpour of rain, which broke off what was rather a certain victory than a battle. Thereupon the recall was sounded, and the night that followed finished the campaign for the Romans, while they slept. For the Latins and Hernici abandoned the Volsci and marched off to their homes, their evil counsels rewarded with as evil an outcome; and the Volsci, perceiving themselves to be deserted by those on whom they had relied in their rebellion, forsook their camp and shut themselves up within the walls of Satricum. Camillus at first set about confining them with a palisade and mound, intending to lay siege to them; but finding the enemy made no sorties to interrupt the work, he concluded they had not sufficient resolution to make him wait so long for victory. He therefore encouraged his troops not to wear themselves out with protracted toil, as though they were besieging Veii, when victory was within their grasp; and with great alacrity on the part of the soldiers, he approached the walls from every side and captured the town with scalingladders. The Volsci threw away their weapons and surrendered.

IX. But the general's thoughts were turning to a matter of greater moment, namely Antium, which, as being the Volscian capital, he held responsible for the last war. But because, without extensive equipment of artillery and engines, it was impossible to take so strong a town, he left his colleague in command of the army and proceeded to Rome, that he might

- 3 ut senatum ad excidendum Antium hortaretur. Inter sermonem eius — credo rem Antiatem diuturniorem manere dis cordi fuisse — legati ab Nepete ac Sutrio auxilium adversus Etruscos petentes veniunt, brevem occasionem esse ferendi auxilii memorantes. Eo
- 4 vim Camilli ab Antio fortuna avertit. Namque cum ea loca opposita Etruriae et velut claustra inde portaeque essent, et illis occupandi ea cum quid novi molirentur, et Romanis recipiendi tuendique
- 5 cura erat. Igitur senatui cum Camillo agi placuit ut omisso Antio bellum Etruscum susciperet; legiones urbanae quibus Quinctius praefuerat ei
- 6 decernuntur. Quamquam expertum exercitum ad-suetumque imperio qui in Volscis erat mallet, nihil recusavit; Valerium tantummodo imperii socium de-poposcit. Quinctius Horatiusque successores Valerio in Volscos missi.
- 7 Profecti ab urbe Sutrium Furius et Valerius partem oppidi iam captam ab Etruscis invenere, ex parte altera intersaeptis itineribus aegre oppida-
- 8 nos vim hostium ab se arcentes. Cum Romani auxilii adventus tum Camilli nomen celeberrimum apud hostes sociosque et in praesentia rem incli-natam sustinuit et spatium ad opem ferendam dedit.
- 9 Itaque diviso exercitu Camillus collegam in eam

¹ With this remark compare I. iv. 1.

urge the senate to undertake the destruction of Antium. While he was speaking—I suppose it was Heaven's will that the Antian state should continue somewhat longer¹—envoys from Nepete and Sutrium appeared, who asked for help against the Etruscans, saying that the opportunity of lending aid would soon be past. To this quarter Fortune diverted the energies of Camillus, away from Antium. For since these places were on the frontier of Etruria, and were the barriers, so to speak, and gateways of that region, the Etruscans were concerned to seize them, as often as they had any new design in hand, and the Romans to recover or defend them. The senate therefore resolved to request of Camillus that he should relinquish Antium and undertake the Etruscan war, and voted him the city levies which had been under the command of Quinctius. Although Camillus would have preferred the army, disciplined and used to his authority, which lay in the Volscian country, he made no objection, only stipulating that Valerius should be associated with him in the command. Quinctius and Horatius were dispatched to succeed Valerius against the Volsci.

Leaving the City and marching to Sutrium, Furius and Valerius found that a part of the town was already captured by the Etruscans, and that in the other part the townspeople had barricaded the streets and were defending themselves with great difficulty from the onslaughts of their enemies. The arrival of succour from Rome, and particularly the great reputation which Camillus enjoyed with both friends and foes, checked for the moment the disastrous course of events and afforded time to render assistance. Accordingly, Camillus divided the army,

A.U.C.
368

- partem circumductis copiis quam hostes tenebant moenia adgredi iubet, non tam a spe¹ scalis capi urbem posse quam ut aversis eo hostibus et oppidanis iam pugnando fessis laxaretur labor et ipse spatium
- 10 intrandi sine certamine moenia haberet. Quod cum simul utrinque factum esset ancepsque terror Etruseos circumstaret, et moenia summa vi oppugnari et intra moenia esse hostem viderent, porta
- 11 se quae una forte non obsidebatur trepidi uno agmine eicere. Magna caedes fugientium et in urbe et per agros est facta. Plures a Furianis intra moenia caesi; Valeriani expeditiores ad persequendum² fuere, nec ante noctem, quae conspectum ademit, finem caedendi fecere.
- 12 Sutrio recepto restitutoque sociis Nepete exercitus ductus, quod per deditionem acceptum iam totum Etrusci habebant.

X. Videbatur plus in ea urbe recipienda laboris fore, non eo solum quod tota hostium erat, sed etiam quod parte Nepesinorum prodente civitatem

2 facta erat deditio; mitti tamen ad principes eorum placuit ut secernerent se ab Etruscis fidemque quam

3 implorassent ab Romanis, ipsi praestarent. Unde

¹ tam a spe *A*² Heerwagen: tanta spe Ω .

² persequendum M. Mueller: persequendos Ω .

and directed his colleague to make a circuit with his forces and to attack the walls on the side which was held by the enemy. His hope was not so much that the city would be taken by escalade, as that the enemy might be diverted to that quarter—easing thereby the strain upon the townsmen, who were already worn out with fighting—and that he might himself have an opportunity of entering the place without encountering resistance. But on this plan being put into effect simultaneously at both points, the Etruscans, finding themselves threatened on either side and seeing that the walls were being violently assailed and that the enemy was inside the city, threw themselves out by the only gate which chanced to be unguarded, in one panic-stricken throng. Great was the carnage they suffered as they fled, both in the city and in the fields. Furius's men slew more within the walls; the soldiers of Valerius were more lightly equipped for pursuit, and kept up the massacre until night made it impossible to see.

Having retaken Sutrium and restored it to our allies, the army marched to Nepete, which had surrendered to the Etruscans, who were now in complete possession.

X. It appeared likely that this town would be more troublesome to recover, not only because it was wholly in the hands of the enemy, but also because a faction of the Nepesini had betrayed their state and arranged the capitulation. It was nevertheless decided to send word to their leaders, that they should sever themselves from the Etruscans and extend to the Romans the same trusty aid which they had requested at their hands. When the reply came

A.U.C.
368

cum responsum allatum esset nihil suae potestatis esse, Etruscos moenia custodiasque portarum tenere, primo populationibus agri terror est oppidanis ad-4 motus; deinde, postquam deditionis quam societatis fides sanctior erat, fascibus sarmentorum ex agro conlatis ductus ad moenia exercitus completisque
fossis scalae admotae, et clamore primo impetuque
5 oppidum capitur. Nepesinis inde edictum ut arma ponant, parciue iussum inermi: Etrusci pariter armati atque inermes caesi. Nepesinorum quoque auctores deditionis securi percussi: innoxiae multitudini redditae res, oppidumque cum praesidio 6 relictum. Ita duabus sociis urbibus ex hoste receptis victorem exercitum tribuni cum magna gloria Romam reduxerunt.

Eodem anno ab Latinis Hernicisque res repetitae quaesitumque cur per eos annos militem ex instituto 7 non dedissent. Responsum frequenti utriusque gen-tis concilio est nec culpam in eo publicam nec
consilium fuisse quod suae iuventutis aliqui apud 8 Volscos militaverint; eos tamen ipsos pravi consilii poenam habere, nec quemquam ex his reducem esse;
militis autem non dati causam terrorem adsidium
a Volscis fuisse, quam pestem adhaerentem lateri suo tot super alia aliis bellis exhauriri nequisse.

BOOK VI. x. 3-8

back that they were powerless, that the Etruscans B.C. 385 held the walls and guarded the gates, the Romans first laid waste their fields, in an effort to frighten the townsfolk; then, when the sanctity of their surrender proved to be more binding on them than that of their alliance, they gathered osiers from the fields and made fascines, and the army being led against the walls filled up the moat, erected scaling-ladders, and carried the town at the first shout and charge. The Nepesini were then commanded to lay down their weapons and the order was given to spare such as were unarmed. The Etruscans were put to death, whether armed or not. Of the Nepesini, too, those who were responsible for the surrender were executed; the innocent populace were given back their possessions, and the town was left with a garrison. After thus regaining from the enemy two cities of the allies, the victorious army under its tribunes marched gloriously back to Rome.

The same year demands for reparation were made upon the Latins and the Hernici, and they were asked why, during recent years, they had furnished no soldiers, as they had agreed to do. Both nations replied in plenary assemblies that no blame or evil purpose attached to the state because a few of their young men had served with the Volsci. These men had, for that matter, paid the penalty for their distorted judgment, and not one of them had come back; as to their having furnished no soldiers, this had been due to their constant fear of the Volsci—a pest that clung so fast to them that with all that long succession of wars they had been unable to shake it off. On learning of this answer, the

A.U.C. 368 9 Quae relata patribus magis tempus quam causam non visa belli habere.

A.U.C. 369 XI. Insequenti anno A. Manlio P. Cornelio T. et L. Quinctiis Capitolinis L. Papirio Cursore iterum C. Sergio¹ iterum² tribunis consulari potestate
 2 grave bellum foris, gravior domi seditio exorta, bellum ab Volscis adiuncta Latinorum atque Hernicorum defectione, seditio, unde minime timeri potuit, a patriciae gentis viro et inclitae famae,
 3 M. Manlio Capitolino. Qui nimius animi cum alios principes sperneret, uni invideret, eximio simul honoribus atque virtutibus, M. Furio, aegre ferebat
 4 solum eum in magistratibus, solum apud exercitus³ tantum iam eminere ut iisdem auspiciis creatos non pro collegis sed pro ministris habeat, cum interim, si quis vere aestimare velit, a M. Furio recuperari patria ex obsidione hostium non potuerit, nisi a se
 5 prius Capitolium atque arx servata esset; et ille inter aurum accipiendum et in spem pacis solutis animis Gallos adgressus sit, ipse armatos capientesque arcem depulerit; illius gloriae pars virilis apud omnes milites sit qui simul vicerint, suae victoriae neminem omnium mortalium socium esse
 6 constet.⁴ His opinionibus inflato animo, ad hoc

¹ iterum C. Sergio added by Glareanus and Sigonius from chap. v. § 7 and chap. xxvii. § 2.

² iterum A² or A⁴: ii Ω: duobus M⁸OE: u L: iii H: iis U.

³ solum apud exercitus Madvig: solum apud exercitus esse Ω.

⁴ esse constet Harant: esse Ω.

BOOK VI. x. 9—xi. 6

senators were of opinion that they lacked not so much the ground for war as a favourable opportunity. B.C. 386

XI. In the following year, when the consular tribunes were Aulus Manlius, Publius Cornelius, Titus and Lucius Quinctius Capitolinus, Lucius Papirius Cursor (for the second time) and Gaius Sergius (for the second time), a serious foreign war broke out, and an even more serious domestic schism. The war was set on foot by the Volsci, in conjunction with a revolt on the part of the Latins and Hernici; the schism originated where such a thing was least to be apprehended, with a man of patrician family and high renown, Marcus Manlius Capitolinus. This man, scorning, in his overweening pride, the other nobles, but envying the one who excelled them all in honours and good qualities, namely Marcus Furius, could ill endure that Camillus should at last have attained to such solitary eminence, both amongst the magistrates and in the armies, as to have those who had been chosen under the same auspices not for colleagues but for servants; whereas—if one considered the situation fairly—it would have been impossible for Marcus Furius to redeem his native City from the leaguer of her enemies, unless Manlius himself had before that saved the Capitol and Citadel. Camillus had assailed the Gauls while they were receiving the gold and while their resolution was relaxed by thoughts of peace; but he himself had driven them back, as they came on, sword in hand, in the act of taking the Citadel. Of the glory of Camillus a goodly portion belonged to all the soldiers who had conquered with him: in his own victory it was acknowledged that no mortal soever had a share. Puffed up with these

- vitio quoque ingenii vehemens et impotens, postquam inter patres non quantum aequum censebat 7 excellere suas opes animadvertit, primus¹ omnium ex patribus popularis factus cum plebeiis magistratibus consilia communicare; criminando patres, alliciendo ad se plebem iam aura,² non consilio ferri
 8 famaеque magnae malle quam bonae esse. Et non contentus agrariis legibus, quae materia semper tribunis plebi seditionum fuisset, fidem³ moliri coepit: acriores quippe aeris alieni stimulos esse, qui non egestatem modo atque ignominiam minentur sed nervo ac vinculis corpus liberum territent.
 9 Et erat aeris alieni magna vis re⁴ damnosissima etiam divitibus, aedificando, contracta. Bellum itaque Volscum, grave per se, oneratum Latinorum atque Hernicorum defectione, in speciem causae iactatum 10 ut maior potestas quaereretur; sed nova consilia Manli magis compulere senatum ad dictatorem creandum. Creatus A. Cornelius Cossus magistrum equitum dixit T. Quinctium Capitolinum.

XII. Dictator etsi maiorem dimicationem propositam domi quam foris cernebat, tamen, seu quia celeritate ad bellum opus erat, seu victoria triumphoque dictaturae ipsi vires se additurum ratus, dilectu habito in agrum Pomptinum, quo a Volscis exercitum inductum⁵ audierat, pergit.

- 2 Non dubito, praeter satietatem tot iam libris

¹ primus U'ς Tan. Faber: primus U: primo O: primum Ω.

² plebem iam auram Vorn. ? MHTD: plebem iam auriam L.: plebeiā auria A: plebeiam auram *F*² (plebeiam P) *FUBOET*²*D*³*A*².

³ fidem Sigonius (after Faernus): idem (or Idēn) Ω: omitted by A.

⁴ re ς Freinsheim: res Ω.

⁵ inductum *F*²*U*: indictum (inditum A) Ω: induci indictum *MA*²: indictum induci OE: induci *I*³ (margin).

opinions, and being besides, through a defect of nature, impetuous and passionate, when he perceived that his abilities did not bring him that leadership amongst the nobles which he thought they merited, he was the first of all the patricians to turn demagogue and to cast in his lot with the plebeian magistrates. He abused the nobles, he courted the favour of the plebs; and swept along by the breath of popularity and not by good counsel chose rather to be reputed great than virtuous. Moreover, not content with agrarian proposals, which had ever served the tribunes to stir up sedition, he began an attack on credit; for he held that debt was a sharper goad, since it not only threatened poverty and shame, but terrified the freeman with the thought of shackles and imprisonment. And in fact there had been a vast piling up of debts, by reason of a thing that is ruinous even to the rich, to wit, building. And so the Volscian war, grave in itself and made still graver by the defection of the Latins and Hernici, was alleged as a reason for seeking a greater authority; but the revolutionary schemes of Manlius were the more compelling cause of the senate's naming a dictator. They appointed Aulus Cornelius Cossus, who appointed as his master of the horse Titus Quinctius Capitolinus.

XII. The dictator perceived that a greater struggle was impending at home than abroad. But either the war demanded haste, or he believed that by a victory and triumph he could add power to the dictatorship itself. So he mustered his forces and proceeded to the Pomptine territory, which he had heard was invaded by a Volscian army.

I doubt not that those who are surfeited with

- adsidua bella cum Volscis gesta legentibus illud quoque succursurum, quod mihi percensenti propiores temporibus harum rerum auctores miraculo fuit, unde totiens victis Volscis et Aequis suffecerint
- 3 milites. Quod cum ab antiquis tacitum praetermissum sit, cuius tandem ego rei praeter opinionem, quae sua cuique coniectanti esse potest, auctor sim?
- 4 Simile veri est aut intervallis bellorum, sicut nunc in dilectibus fit Romanis, alia atque alia subole iuniorum ad bella instauranda totiens usos esse, aut non ex iisdem semper populis exercitus scriptos,
- 5 quamquam eadem semper gens bellum intulerit, aut innumerabilem multitudinem liberorum capitum in eis fuisse locis quae nunc vix seminario exiguo militum relicto servitia Romana ab solitudine vindicant.
- 6 Ingens certe, quod inter omnes auctores conveniat, quamquam nuper Camilli ductu atque auspicio accisae res erant, Volscorum exercitus fuit; ad hoc Latini Hernicique accesserant et Circeiensium quidam et coloni etiam a Velitris Romani.
- 7 Dictator castris eo die positis, postero cum auspicio prodisset hostiaque caesa pacem deum adorasset, laetus ad milites iam arma ad propositum pugnae signum, sicut edictum erat, luce prima capientes
- 8 processit. "Nostra victoria est, milites," inquit,

¹ A red flag flown from the general's tent.

reading in all these books about endless wars waged B.C. 385 with the Volsci will ask, as with great astonishment I did myself, on examining the historians who were nearer in point of time to those events, where the so oft defeated Volsci and Aequi got their supply of soldiers. But since the ancients have passed over this question in silence, what can I adduce other than an opinion such as everyone can by conjecture arrive at for himself? It is probable either that in the intervals between wars successive generations sprang up—as happens nowadays in the levies of the Romans—which they used for their frequent renewals of war; or that it was not always the same tribes from which they enrolled their armies—though it was always the same nation which made war; or else that there was an innumerable multitude of freemen in those regions which in our day scarce afford a scanty seed-plot for soldiers, and are only saved from becoming a waste desert by gangs of Roman slaves. In any case, all the authorities would agree that the army of the Volsci was an enormous one, although their state had recently suffered a heavy blow from the generalship and auspices of Camillus. There were, besides, additional forces of Latins and Hernici, as well as a certain number from Circei, and even Roman colonists from Velitrae.

On the morning after he had made his camp, the dictator took the auspices, and coming forth from his tent offered up a victim and besought the favour of Heaven. He then with great cheerfulness presented himself before the soldiers, who were already arming by the first rays of light, as they had been warned to do when the signal for battle¹ should be displayed. “Ours is the victory, soldiers,” he ex-

“ si quid di vatesque eorum in futurum vident. Itaque, ut decet certae spei plenos et cum imparibus manus conserturos, pilis ante pedes positis gladiis tantum dextras armemus. Ne procurri quidem ab acie velim, sed obnixos vos stabili gradu impetum
 9 hostium excipere. Ubi illi vana iniecerint missilia et effusi stantibus vobis se intulerint, tum micent gladii et veniat in mentem unicuique deos esse qui Romanum adiuvent, deos qui secundis avibus in 10 proelium miserint. Tu T. Quincti, equitem intentus ad primum initium moti certaminis teneas; ubi haerere iam aciem conlato pede videris, tum terrorem equestrem occupatis alio pavore infer invec-11 tusque ordines pugnantium dissipa.” Sic eques, sic pedes, ut praeceperat, pugnant; nec dux legiones nec fortuna fefellit ducem.

XIII. Multitudo hostium, nulli rei praeterquam numero freta et oculis utramque metiens aciem,
 2 temere proelium iniit, temere omisit; clamore tantum missilibusque telis et primo pugnae impetu ferox gladios et conlatum pedem et voltum hostis
 3 ardore animi micantem ferre non potuit. Impulsa frons prima et trepidatio subsidiis inlata; et suum terrorem intulit eques; rupti inde multis locis ordines motaque omnia et fluctuanti similis acies claimed, "if the gods and the soothsayers who B.C. 385 interpret them can at all see what is coming. And so, as befits men who with sure confidence are about to fight with those who are no match for them, let us lay our javelins at our feet and arm our right hands with swords only. I would have none run out from the line, but all stand firmly planted and receive the onset of our enemies. When they have discharged their missiles without effect, and come thronging upon you where you stand, then let your blades flash out, and let every man of you bethink him that the gods are the Roman's helpers, that the gods have with fair omens sent him into battle. Do you, Titus Quinctius, hold back your cavalry and watch for the first beginning of the mellay; when you see that the lines are already close-locked, foot to foot, then loose the terrors of your horse against them, while they are taken up with another fear; charge them as they fight, and break their ranks." Like horse, like foot, as they were bidden, so they fought; the general failed not his legions, nor fortune the general.

XIII. The hostile multitude, relying on numbers only and measuring both armies with their eyes recklessly began the fight and as recklessly gave it up; their boldness went no further than the battle-cry, the discharge of missiles, and the first fury of the onset; the play of swords, when foot met foot, and the glance of the foeman that darted out the fire of his spirit, they could not abide. Their front was first driven in and communicated its disorder to the supports; the horsemen, too, inspired a terror of their own; next the ranks were broken at many points, and all was in commotion, and the line reerat. Dein postquam cadentibus primis iam ad se quisque perventuram caedem cernebat, terga vertunt.

4 Instare¹ Romanus; et donec armati confertique abibant, peditum labor in persequendo fuit; postquam iactari arma passim fugaque per agros spargi aciem hostium animadversum est, tum equitum turmae emissae dato signo ne in singulorum morando caede spatium ad evadendum interim multitudini

5 darent: satis esse missilibus ac terrore impediri cursum obequitandoque agmen teneri dum adsequi

6 pedes et iusta caede conficere hostem posset. Fugae sequendique non ante noctem finis fuit. Capta quoque ac direpta eodem die castra Volscorum, praedaeque omnis praeter libera corpora militi con-

7 cessa est. Pars maxima captivorum ex Latinis atque Hernicis fuit, nec omnium² de plebe, ut credi posset mercede militasse, sed principes quidam iuventutis inventi, manifesta fides publica ope Volscos

8 hostes adiatos. Circeiensium quoque quidam cogniti et coloni a Velitris; Romanque omnes missi percontantibus primoribus patrum eadem quae dictatori defectionem sui quisque populi haud perplexe indicavere.

XIV. Dictator exercitum in stativis tenebat minime dubius bellum cum iis populis patres

¹ instare $A^2\zeta$; stare Ω .

² omnium F^3B : hominum Ω .

seemed a surging wave. Then, as soon as each B.C. 385 began to see that with the fall of those in front his own turn to be killed would soon be coming, they turned and fled. The Romans pressed on after them, and as long as they retained their arms and withdrew in masses, it was the infantry's task to pursue them; but when the enemy were seen to be throwing away their weapons on every hand and their army to be dispersed in flight over the fields; then the cavalry squadrons were let loose, with orders not to stop to kill single fugitives and afford meanwhile an opportunity to the main body of escaping; it was sufficient if by darting missiles at them to alarm them, and by riding across their path, they should hold the column in check, till the infantry could overtake the enemy and utterly destroy them. Flight and pursuit continued until nightfall. The Volscian camp was also captured the same day and sacked, and all the booty except the persons of freemen was turned over to the soldiers. The chief part of the prisoners consisted of Latins and Hernici, not all of whom were plebeians, such as might be supposed to have served as mercenaries, but certain youths of high rank were discovered, a clear proof that their states had publicly countenanced the Volscian enemy. Some, again, were recognized as being from Circei and from the colony at Velitrae. They were all sent to Rome, and being questioned by the chief senators, gave the same answers they had given the dictator, and in no uncertain terms laid bare the defection of their respective peoples.

XIV. The dictator maintained his army in camp, not doubting in the least that the senate would

- iussuros, cum maior domi exorta moles coegit acciri
 Romam eum gliscente in dies seditione, quam solito
 2 magis metuendam auctor faciebat. Non enim iam orationes modo M. Manli sed facta, popularia in speciem, tumultuosa eadem qua mente fierent
 3 intuenti¹ erant. Centurionem, nobilem militaribus factis, iudicatum pecuniae cum duci vidisset, medio foro cum caterva sua accurrit et manum iniecit;
 vociferatusque de superbia patrum ac crudelitate
 feneratorum et miseriis plebis, virtutibus eius viri 4 fortunaque, "tum vero ego" inquit "nequiquam hac dextra Capitolium arcemque servaverim, si civem commilitonemque meum tamquam Gallis victoribus captum in servitutum ac vincula duci videam." 5 Inde rem creditori palam populo solvit libraque et aere liberatum emittit, deos atque homines obtes-tantem ut M. Manlio, liberatori suo, parenti plebis 6 Romanae, gratiam referant. Acceptus extemplo in tumultuosam turbam et ipse tumultum augebat, cicatrices acceptas Veienti Gallico aliisque deinceps 7 bellis ostentans: se militantem, se restituentem eversos penates, multiplici iam sorte exsoluta,

¹ intuenti Gronovius: intuenda Ω.

¹ Actually the senate could only recommend a declaration of war, the ultimate decision resting with the comitia centuriata.

² Symbolical of the sale by which the debtor was conceived to be transferred from the ownership of his creditor to that of Liberty.

declare war on those nations ;¹ when a greater disturbance broke out at home and obliged them to summon him to the City, where the sedition was increasing from day to day, and occasioned more than the usual alarm by reason of the man who was behind it. For now not only the speeches of Manlius, but his actions as well, while ostensibly democratic, were really revolutionary, considering the purpose which inspired them. A centurion renowned for military prowess had been condemned for debt. As he was being led away, Manlius caught sight of him, and hastening to his side through the midst of the Forum with his band of retainers, he laid hold of him, and exclaiming at the arrogance of the patricians, the heartlessness of the money-lenders, the sufferings of the plebs, and the merits and misfortunes of this man, "Then in very truth," he cried, "was it all in vain that with this right hand I saved the Capitol and the Citadel, if I am to see my fellow citizen and fellow soldier carried off a captive—as though the Gauls had conquered us—to servitude and chains!" He then paid the money to the creditor in full sight of the people, and with the ceremony of the scales and bronze² redeemed the debtor and set him free, invoking the blessing of gods and men on Marcus Manlius, his liberator, the father of the Roman plebs. Being at once received into the midst of a tumultuous throng, he added to the tumult by displaying the scars he had received in the Veientine, the Gallic, and other successive wars. While he had himself been fighting, he said, and rebuilding his ruined home, he had been overwhelmed with usury, though he had paid already many times the amount of the capital

B.C. 385

A.U.C.
369

- mergentibus semper sortem usuris, obrutum fenore
 8 esse; videre lucem, forum, civium ora M. Manli opera; omnia parentum beneficia ab illo se habere;
 illi devovere corporis vitaeque ac sanguinis quod
 supersit; quodcumque sibi cum patria penatibus
 publicis ac privatis iuris fuerit, id cum uno homine 9 esse. His vocibus instincta plebes cum iam unius hominis esset, addita alia commodioris¹ ad omnia 10 turbanda consilii res. Fundum in Veienti, caput patrimonii, subiecit praeconi, “ne quem vestrum” inquit, “Quirites, donec quicquam in re mea supere-rit, iudicatum addictumve duci patiar.” Id vero ita accendit animos ut per omne fas ac nefas secuturi vindicem libertatis viderentur.
- 11 Ad hoc domi contionantis in modum sermones
 pleni criminum in patres; inter quos, omissio² discrimine vera an vana iaceret, thesauros Gallici auri occultari a patribus³ nec iam possidendis publicis agris contentos esse nisi pecuniam quoque publicam avertant; ea res si palam fiat, exsolvi plebem aere 12 alieno posse. Quae ubi obiecta spes est, enimvero indignum facinus videri: cum conferendum ad redi-

¹ commodioris *A*ζ: commotioris Ω: accommodatioris Wesenberg.

² omissio ζ Drakenborch: cum omissio Ω.

³ occultari a patribus Gronovius: occultari a patribus iecit (iniecit U) Ω.

debt, for the interest always swallowed up the principal; that he beheld the light of day, the Forum, the faces of his fellow citizens, he owed to the generosity of Marcus Manlius, at whose hands he had experienced all the loving-kindness of parents; to him he solemnly devoted his remaining strength and life and blood; what ties soever bound him to native land and the gods of his state and family, bound him to one man alone. Excited by these words, the commons were already at the beck of a single man, when Manlius did another thing even better calculated to promote a general embroilment. For he gave a farm in the Veientine district, which formed the main part of his fortune, to an auctioneer to sell,—“that I may not suffer one of your number, Quirites,” said he, “to be condemned, made over, and carried off to slavery, so long as anything of my estate remains.” At this their ardour was so kindled that it was clear that in every measure, right or wrong, they would follow the champion of their liberty.

Besides this he delivered in his house harangues that were full of accusation against the patricians; amongst other things, he declared, with reckless indifference to truth or falsehood, that the patricians were concealing treasures of Gallic gold, and were no longer content with possessing the state lands, unless they could also divert to their own use the money of the state—money which, if it were employed for the common weal, would suffice to clear the plebs of debt. On this hope being held out to them, the commons felt that they were indeed ill-used. When, they said, it had been necessary to raise gold for the redemption of their City from the mendam civitatem a Gallis aurum fuerit, tributo conlationem factam, idem aurum ex hostibus captum 13 in paucorum praedam cessisse. Itaque exsequebantur quaerendo ubi tantae rei furtum occultaretur; differentique et tempore suo se indicaturum dicenti ceteris omissis eo versae erant omnium curae, apparebatque nec veri indicii gratiam mediam nec falsi offensionem fore.

XV. Ita suspensis rebus dictator accitus ab exercitu in urbem venit. Postero die senatu habito cum satis periclitatus voluntates hominum discedere senatum ab se vetuisset, stipatus ea multitudine, sella in comitio posita, viatorem ad M. Manlium
 2 misit; qui dictatoris iussu vocatus, cum signum suis dedisset adesse certamen, agmine ingenti ad
 3 tribunal venit. Hinc senatus, hinc plebs, suum quisque intuentes ducem, velut in acie constiterant.
 4 Tum dictator silentio facto: "utinam" inquit "mihi patribusque Romanis ita de ceteris rebus cum plebe conveniat, quemadmodum quod ad te attinet eamque rem quam de te sum quaesiturus conven-
 5 turum satis confido. Spem factam a te civitati video fide incolumi ex thesauris Gallicis, quos primores

Gauls, it had been collected by taxation; but this same gold, after being captured from the enemy, had become the spoil of a few. They therefore persistently demanded to be told where all that stolen money was hid; and when he put them off with the promise that he would tell them at the proper time, they dropped their other concerns and became one and all so absorbed in this, that it was evident he would reap no little gratitude if his report proved true, and no small offence if it turned out to be false. B.C. 385

XV. Such was the critical state of affairs when the dictator was sent for from the army and came to Rome. Next day he held a meeting of the senate, and having satisfied himself of the people's support, he commanded the senators not to leave him, and coming forth with a great company of them into the Comitium, he there set up his curule chair and dispatched an officer for Marcus Manlius. Being thus summoned by order of the dictator, Manlius signalled to his friends that the struggle was at hand, and advanced with a great train of followers to the tribunal. On this side were ranged the senators, on that the plebs, looking, every man of them, to his respective leader, as though they had formed up for battle. Then, having obtained silence, the dictator began: "I would," said he, "that I and the senators of Rome might agree with the plebs in all things else as readily as I am confident we shall do regarding you and the demand I am about to make of you. I perceive that you have caused the citizens to hope that the money which has been lent may be repaid, without injury to credit, out of Gallic treasure which prominent

- patrum occultent, creditum solvi posse. Cui ego rei tantum abest ut impedimento sim ut contra te, M. Manli, adhorter, liberes fenore plebem Romanam et istos incubantes publicis thesauris ex praeda 6 clandestina evolvas. Quod nisi facis, sive ut et ipse in parte praedae sis sive quia vanum indicium est, in vincla te duci iubebo nec diutius patiar a te multitudinem fallaci spe concitari.”
- 7 Ad ea Manlius nec se fefellisse ait, non adversus Volscos, totiens hostes quotiens patribus expediat, nec adversus Latinos Hernicosque, quos falsis criminibus in arma agant, sed adversus se ac plebem Roma-
 8 nam dictatorem creatum esse; iam omisso bello quod simulatum sit, in se impetum fieri; iam dictatorem profiteri patrocinium feneratorum adversus plebem; iam sibi ex favore multitudinis crimen et perniciem
 9 quaeri. “Offendit” inquit “te, A. Corneli, vosque, patres conscripti, circumfusa turba lateri meo? Quin eam diducitis¹ a me singuli vestris beneficiis, intercedendo, eximendo de nervo cives vestros, prohibendo iudicatos addictosque duci, ex eo, quod affluit opibus vestris sustinendo necessitates aliorum?”
- 10 Sed quid ego vos de vestro impendatis, hortor? Sortem reliquam² ferte: de capite deducite quod usuris pernumeratum est; iam nihilo mea turba

¹ diducitis Vorm? MPFBOET² (but M has quine audi ducitis): deducitis UHTDLA.

² reliquam Madvig: aliquam Ω: aliquando E.S. Thompson.

BOOK VI. xv. 5-10

patricians are concealing. This proposal I am so far from hindering, that on the contrary I exhort you, Marcus Manlius, to free the Roman plebs from usury, and dislodge from their secret hoards those men who are brooding jealously over the public treasure; which if you do not, whether that you may share the spoil yourself, or because your story is a lie, I shall order you into custody, nor suffer you any longer to excite the multitude with delusive hopes." B.C. 385

To this Manlius replied that he had not failed to perceive that the appointment of a dictator was aimed, not at the Volsci, who were enemies whenever it suited the convenience of the patricians, nor at the Latins and Hernici, whom they were driving by false accusations to take up arms, but at himself and the Roman plebs. And now they had dropped their pretended war and were attacking him; now the dictator was coming out as the champion of the money-lenders against the plebs; and they were seeking now to derive from the people's friendliness to him some charge that might lead to his destruction. "Does it offend you," he asked, "Aulus Cornelius, and you, Conscript Fathers, that a crowd attends me? Why do you not take it from me by doing, each of you, acts of kindness, by saving debtors, by rescuing your fellow citizens from prison, by preventing the enslavement of those who have been condemned and assigned, by employing your superfluity of wealth to sustain the necessities of others? But why should I ask of you that you spend of your own money? Receive what is outstanding of the original debts, after deducting from the principal what has been paid in interest, and

A.U.C.
369

11 quam ullius conspectior erit. At enim quid ita solus ego civium curam ago? Nihilo magis quod respondeam habeo quam si quaeras quid ita solus Capitolium arcemque servaverim. Et tum universis 12 quam potui opem tuli et nunc singulis feram. Nam quod ad thesauros Gallicos attinet, rem suapte natura facilem difficilem interrogatio facit. Cur enim quaeritis quod scitis? cur quod in sinu vestro
 est excuti iubetis potius quam ponatis, nisi aliqua 13 fraus subest? Quo magis argui praestigias iubetis vestras, eo plus vereor ne abstuleritis observantibus etiam oculos. Itaque non ego vobis ut indicem praedas vestras, sed vos id cogendi estis ut in medium proferatis."

XVI. Cum mittere ambages dictator iuberet et aut peragere verum indicium cogeret aut fateri facinus insimulati falso crimine senatus oblataeque
 vani furti invidiae, negantem arbitrio inimicorum 2 se locuturum in vincla duci iussit. Arreptus a viatore "Iuppiter" inquit "optime maxime Iunoque regina ac Minerva ceterique di deaeque, qui Capito-lium arcemque incolitis, sicine vestrum militem ac praesidem sinitis vexari ab inimicis? Haec dextra, qua Gallos fudi a delubris vestris, iam in vinclis et 3 catenis erit? Nullius nec oculi nec aures indigni-tatem ferebant; sed invicta sibi quaedam patientis-

my retinue will soon attract no more notice than any man's. But why, you will ask, am I the only man to be concerned for my fellow citizens? I can no more answer you than if you were to ask why I was the only man to save the Capitol and Citadel. As then—to the best of my ability—I helped the people at large, so now will I help single persons. And touching the Gallic treasure—the thing itself is simple, but your questioning makes it difficult. For why do you ask about a thing you know? Why do you bid us shake out what is in your purses, and not rather lay it down yourselves—unless there is some cheat involved? The more you bid us expose your sleight-of-hand, the more I fear you may have robbed us even of our eyes, while we were watching you. And so it is not I that must be forced to tell of your plunder, but you that must be compelled to give it up.”

XVI. But the dictator bade him cease to quibble, and insisted that he should either make his indictment good or confess to the crime of having accused the senate falsely and exposed it to the unmerited odium of a charge of theft; and when Manlius refused to speak at the pleasure of his enemies, he commanded him to be imprisoned. On being arrested by the attendant, Manlius cried out, “Jupiter Optimus Maximus, and Queen Juno and Minerva, and all ye other gods and goddesses that dwell in the Capitol and in the Citadel, is it thus ye suffer your soldier and protector to be tormented by his adversaries? Shall this right arm wherewith I routed the Gauls from your shrines be now chained and fettered?” There was none that could endure to behold or hear this shame; but there were

sima iusti imperii civitas fecerat, nec adversus dictatoriam vim aut tribuni plebis aut ipsa plebs 4 attollere oculos aut hiscere audebant. Coniecto in carcerem Manlio satis constat magnam partem plebis vestem mutasse, multos mortales capillum ac barbam promisisse obversatamque vestibulo carceris maestam turbam.

5 Dictator de Volscis triumphavit, invidiaeque magis triumphus quam gloriae fuit; quippe domi non militiae partum eum actumque de cive non de hoste fremebant: unum defuisse tantum superbiae, quod 6 non M. Manlius ante currum sit ductus. Iamque haud procul seditione res erat; cuius leniendae causa postulante nullo largitor voluntarius repente
senatus factus Satricum coloniam duo milia civium Romanorum deduci iussit. Bina iugera et semisses 7 agri adsignati; quod cum et parvum et paucis datum et mercedem esse prodendi M. Manli interpretaren-8 tur, remedio inritatur seditio. Et iam magis insignis et sordibus et facie reorum turba Manliana erat, amotusque post triumphum abdicatione dictaturae terror et linguam et animos liberaverat hominum.

XVII. Audiebantur itaque propalam voces exprobrantium multitudini, quod defensores suos semper

¹ About one and two-thirds acres. The allotment of Veientine land had been seven iugera.

certain rules of conduct which the citizens, deeply B.C. 385 submissive to regular authority, had made inviolable ;
 nor did either the tribunes of the plebs or the plebs themselves dare to lift their eyes or open their mouths against the power of the dictator. But after Manlius was cast into gaol, it is certain that a great part of the people put on mourning, and that many men permitted their hair and beards to grow, and that a mournful throng hung about the entrance to the prison.

The dictator triumphed over the Volsci, but gained more ill-will thereby than glory ; for men murmured that he had earned it, not in the field, but at home, not over an enemy, but over a citizen ; one thing only had been lacking to his arrogance, in that Marcus Manlius had not been led before his car. By this time the feeling was grown well-nigh seditious ;
 and to appease it the senate—though none demanded
 it—became all at once a voluntary giver, and commanded two thousand Roman citizens to be led out to plant a colony at Satricum. Two ingera and a half¹ of land were allotted them ; but since they chose to regard it as too little, and only given to a few, and as being the price of Manlius's condemnation, the remedy but aggravated the sedition.
 And now the Manlian party were more conspicuous than before, both for their sordid dress and for the sorrowful countenances of defendants ; men's fears had been removed by the abdication of the dictator, following his triumph, and their tongues and spirits
 had been set free.

XVII. Accordingly one began to hear the opinion openly expressed that the people were to blame, because they always by their favours raised their

in praecipitem locum favore tollat, deinde in ipso 2 discrimine periculi destituat: sic Sp. Cassium in agros plebem vocantem, sic Sp. Maelium ab ore civium famem suis impensis propulsantem oppressos, sic M. Manlium mersam et obrutam fenore partem civitatis in libertatem ac lucem extrahentem prodi-3 tum inimicis; saginare plebem populares suos¹ ut iugulentur. Hocine patiendum fuisse, si ad nutum dictatoris non responderit vir consularis? Fingerent mentitum ante atque ideo non habuisse quod tum responderet; cui servo unquam mendacii poenam
 ; vincula fuisse? Non observatam esse memoriam
 noctis illius quae paene ultima atque aeterna nomini Romano fuerit? Non speciem agminis Gallorum per Tarpeiam rupem scandentis? Non ipsius M. Manli, qualem eum armatum, plenum sudoris ac sanguinis,
 ipso paene love erepto ex hostium manibus vidissent?
 5 Selibrisne farris gratiam servatori patriae relatum?
 Et quem prope caelestem, cognomine certe Capitolino Iovi parem fecerint eum pati vinctum in carcere, in tenebris obnoxiam carnificis arbitrio ducere animam?
 Adeo in uno omnibus satis auxilii fuisse, nullam opem
 6 in tam multis uni esse? Iam ne nocte quidem turba ex eo loco dilabebatur refracturosque carcerem mina-bantur, cum repente id² quod erepturi erant, ex

¹ populares suos Ω (cf. Walters and Conway ad loc.): populares Duker: suos Madvig: populares viros Krafft.

² repente id Lutembacher: remisso id Ω: remisso F³ Doria-tius Cr  vier: remisso eo  .

¹ See v. xlvii. 8.

champions to a dizzy eminence, and then at the critical juncture left them in the lurch: it had been so with Spurius Cassius and with Spurius Maelius, of whom the former was destroyed while summoning the people to the land, and the latter while endeavouring at his own expense to stave off starvation from his fellow citizens; it was so with Marcus Manlius, who, finding a part of the citizens overwhelmed and sunk in debt, was dragging them out into light and liberty, when they betrayed him to his adversaries; the plebs fattened their own defenders for the shambles. Was this the penalty a consular must undergo, if he answered not when the dictator nodded to him? Let them assume that he had lied before, and for that reason was then unable to reply: what slave had ever been cast into prison for a lie? Did they not recall that night which had almost been the last eternal night of the Roman name? Could they not see the line of Gauls scaling the Tarpeian Rock? Could they not see Marcus Manlius himself, as they had seen him, covered with sweat and blood, when he had rescued as it were Jupiter himself from the hands of our enemies? Had their half-pound measures of meal requited the saviour of their country?¹ Would they suffer one whom they had well-nigh made a god, and in surname, at any rate, the equal of Jupiter Capitolinus, to be confined in prison, and to draw his breath in darkness, at the mercy of the executioner? When one man had been quite able to help them all, was there no help in so many men for one? By this time the crowd would not even leave the place at night and were threatening that they would force the gaol, when suddenly, just as senatus consulto Manlius vinclis liberatur. Quo facto non seditio finita, sed dux seditioni datus est.

A.U.C.
369

- 7 Per eosdem dies Latinis et Hernicis, simul colonis Circeiensibus et a Velitris, purgantibus se Volsci crimine belli captivosque repetentibus ut suis legibus in eos animadverterent, tristia responsa reddita, tristiora colonis, quod cives Romani patriae oppugnandae nefanda consilia inissent. Non negatum itaque tantum de captivis, sed, in quo ab sociis tamen temperaverant, denuntiaturum senatus verbis facesserent propere ex urbe ab ore atque oculis populi Romani, ne nihil eos legationis ius, externo non civi comparatum, tegeret.

A.U.C.
370

XVIII. Recrudescente Manliana seditione sub exitum¹ anni comitia habita, creatique tribuni militum consulari potestate Ser.² Cornelius Maluginensis iterum P. Valerius Potitus iterum M. Furius Camillus quintum Ser. Sulpicius Rufus iterum C. Papirius Crassus T. Quinctius Cincinnatus iterum.

- 2 Cuius principio anni et patribus et plebi peropportune externa pax data: plebi, quod non advocata dilectu spem cepit, dum tam potentem haberet ducem, fenoris expugnandi: patribus, ne quo externo terrore avocarentur animi ab sanandis domesticis

¹ exitum Madvig: exitu (or excoitu) Ω .

² Ser. Sigonius: sergius Ω .

they were about to rescue Manlius, the senate voted B.C. 385 to release him—an act which, instead of ending the sedition, supplied it with a leader.

At about this time came Latins and Hernici, with colonists from Circeii and from Velitrae, to clear themselves of the charge of joining in the Volscian war and to ask for the release of the captives, that they might punish them in accordance with their own laws. They were harshly answered—especially the colonists, because, though Roman citizens, they had formed the impious design of attacking their native country. And so they were not only denied the captives, but received a rebuke which the allies were spared ; being commanded in the name of the senate to make haste and depart the City, out of the presence and sight of the Roman People, lest they should find no protection in the rights of envoys, which were meant for foreigners, not for citizens.

XVIII. The sedition of Manlius was breaking out B.C. 384 afresh, towards the end of the year, when an election was held which resulted in the choice of the following consular tribunes : Servius Cornelius Maluginensis (for the second time), Publius Valerius Potitus (for the second), Marcus Furius Camillus (for the fifth), Servius Sulpicius Rufus (for the second), Gaius Papirius Crassus, and (for the second time) Titus Quinctius Cincinnatus. The peace which was enjoyed in the early part of this year was equally advantageous to the patricians and to the plebs ; to the plebs because, not being called to service by the levy, they had hopes that they might be able under their powerful leader to storm the stronghold of usury ; to the patricians, because they desired not to be diverted by any foreign peril from healing the

A.U.C.
370

3 malis. Igitur cum pars utraque acrior aliquanto coorta esset, iam¹ propinquum certamen aderat.
Et Manlius advocata domum plebe cum principibus novandarum rerum interdiu noctuque consilia agit, plenior aliquanto animorum irarumque quam antea 4 fuerat. Iram accenderat ignominia recens in animo ad contumeliam inexperto: spiritus dabat, quod nec ausus esset idem in se dictator quod in Sp. Maelio Cincinnatus Quinctius fecisset, et vinculorum suorum invidiam non dictator modo abdicando dictaturam fugisset, sed ne senatus quidem sustinere potuisset.
5 His simul inflatus exacerbatusque iam per se accensos incitabat plebis animos.

“Quousque tandem ignorabitis vires vestras, quas natura ne beluas quidem ignorare voluit? Numerate saltem quot ipsi sitis, quot adversarios habeatis.
6 Quot enim clientes circa singulos fuistis patronos, tot nunc adversus unum hostem eritis.² Si singuli singulos adgressuri essetis, tamen acrius crederem vos pro
libertate quam illos pro dominatione certaturos.
7 Ostendite modo bellum; pacem habebitis. Videant vos paratos ad vim; ius ipsi remittent. Audendum est aliquid universis, aut omnia singulis patienda.
8 Quousque me circumspectabitis? Ego quidem nulli vestrum deero; ne fortuna mea desit videte. Ipse

¹ iam Gronovius: iam in *MA*²: in Ω.

² The words Quot enim—eritis are given their position in the context by Walters and Conway: the MSS. have them after certaturos. The correction was suggested by the omission in HTDLA of si singuli singulos adgressuri essetis, for which DL give his (corruption of h.s. = hic supple), while the missing words are restored by the correctors of TDA. See Walters and Conway, ad loc.

BOOK VI. XVIII. 2-8

sores of the state. Accordingly both sides had taken the field with much more spirit, and the hour of conflict was now at hand. Manlius indeed was inviting the plebeians to his house, and night and day discussing with their leaders plans for accomplishing the revolution, for he was much bolder and more resentful than before. His wrath had been kindled by his recent humiliations, for his pride was a stranger to insult; and his courage had waxed, as he considered that the dictator had not dared to serve him as Quinctius Cincinnatus had served Spurius Maelius, and that his imprisonment had aroused such hatred as not only the dictator had resigned his office to escape, but even the senate had been unable to endure. At once elated and exasperated by these thoughts, he began to work upon the already excited emotions of the plebs.

"How long, pray," he asked them, "will you remain ignorant of your own strength, which nature has willed that even brutes shall know? At least count up your numbers and the number of your adversaries. For as many as you were that gathered as clients about a single patron, so many shall you now be against a single enemy. If you were going to meet them man for man, I should still believe that you would fight more fiercely for your liberty than they for domination. Make but a show of war, and you shall have peace. Let them see you ready to resist, and they will give you your rights of their own accord. We must all unite in some bold stroke, or else, divided, submit to every evil. How long will you keep looking round for me? It is true I shall not fail a single one of you; but you must see to it that fortune fail not me. I myself, your champion,

A.U.C.
370

vindex vester, ubi visum inimicis est, nullus repente fui; et vidistis in vincula duci universi cum qui a 9 singulis vobis vincula depuleram. Quid sperem, si plus in me audeant inimici? An exitum Cassi Maeli-que exspectem? Bene facitis, quod abominamini. Di prohibebunt haec; sed nunquam propter me de caelo descendent; vobis dent mentem oportet ut prohibeatis, sicut mihi dederunt armato togatoque
ut vos a barbaris hostibus, a superbis defenderem 10 civibus. Tam parvus animus tanti populi est ut semper vobis auxilium adversus inimicos satis sit,
nec ullum, nisi quatenus imperari vobis sinatis, certamen adversus patres noritis? Nec hoc natura 11 insitum vobis est, sed usu possidemini. Cur enim adversus externos tantum animorum geritis ut imperare illis aequum censeatis? Quia consuestis cum eis pro imperio certare, adversus hos temptare magis 12 quam tueri libertatem. Tamen, qualescumque duces
habuistis, qualescumque ipsi fuistis, omnia adhuc quantacumque petistis, obtinuistis, seu vi seu fortuna 13 vestra. Tempus est etiam¹ maiora conari. Experi-mini modo et vestram felicitatem et me, ut spero, feliciter expertum; minore negotio qui imperet
patribus imponetis quam qui resisterent imperanti-14 bus imposuistis. Solo aequandae sunt dictaturae

¹ etiam Ω: omitted by Ō: iam Gronovius.

was suddenly brought to naught, when it pleased B.C. 384 your enemies; and you all beheld that man dragged off to prison who had protected each of yourselves from imprisonment. What can I expect, if my enemies grow bolder? Must I look forward to dying like Cassius and Maelius? You do well to express abhorrence. The gods will forbid such a thing; but they will never come down from heaven on my account; they must give you the inspiration to forbid it, as they gave me, in war and in peace, the inspiration to defend you from the barbarity of your foes and the arrogance of your fellow citizens. Is there so little spirit in this great people that you are always satisfied with the help your tribunes lend you against your adversaries, and never quarrel with the senators, save as to the length you will suffer them to go in ruling you? And this is no native trait in you, but you are slaves by use. Why, pray, are you so high and mighty with foreigners as to deem yourselves meet to be their lords? It is because you have been used to vie with them for sovereignty; but against these men, though you make attempts at gaining your liberty, you are not used to defend it. Nevertheless, with such leaders as you have had, and such courage as you yourselves could muster, you have thus far obtained, by violence or good fortune, whatever you have sought. The time has come to attempt even greater things. Do but make trial of your own good fortune and of me, whom, as I think, you have already happily proved; you will find it less trouble to impose a ruler on the patricians, than you encountered in imposing tribunes on them to resist their rule. Dictatorships and consulships must be levelled with consulatusque, ut caput attollere Romana plebes possit. Proinde adeste; prohibete ius de pecuniis dici; ego me patronum profiteor plebis, quod mihi

A.U.C.
370

 15 cura mea et fides nomen induit: vos si quo insigni magis imperii honorisve nomine vestrum appellabitis ducem, eo utemini potentiore ad obtinenda ea quae 16 voltis." Inde de regno agendi ortum initium dicitur; sed nec cum quibus nec quem ad finem consilia pervenerint satis planum traditur.

XIX. At in parte altera senatus de secessione in domum privatam plebis, forte etiam in arce positam,
 2 et imminenti mole libertati¹ agitat. Magna pars vociferantur Servilio Ahala opus esse, qui non in vincla duci iubendo inritet publicum hostem sed
 3 unius iactura civis finiat intestinum bellum. Decurritur ad leniorem verbis sententiam, vim tamen eandem habentem, ut videant magistratus ne quid ex perniciosis consiliis M. Manli res publica detri-
 4 menti capiat. Tum tribuni consulari potestate tribunique plebi—nam et ei,² quia eundem suae³ potestatis, quem libertatis omnium, finem cernebant, patrum auctoritati se dediderant—hi tum⁴ omnes
 5 quid opus facto sit consultant. Cum praeter vim et caedem nihil cuiquam occurreret, eam autem ingentis dimicationis fore appareret, tum M. Menenius et Q.
 6 Publilius⁵ tribuni plebis: "Quid patrum et plebis

¹ libertati ς : libertatis Ω .

² et ei Crévier and Stroth: et Ω : ei U: ex B: erascd in F.

³ suae Walters and Conway: et suae Ω .

⁴ hi tum *E*₇: hii tum Ω : ii tum *P*²*U*: ii tantum F?B: hi tantum *F*³. ⁵ Publilius Glareanus: publius Ω .

the ground, that the Roman plebs may be enabled B.C. 384 to lift its head. Stand by me, then; prevent all court-proceedings regarding moneys; I avow myself the patron of the commons—a title with which my zeal and loyalty have invested me: if you choose to give your leader a more striking title of authority or honour, you will find him the more able to make good your wishes.” It was thus, they say, that the agitation for kingly power was begun; but there is no very clear tradition with whom or to what length his plans were matured.

XIX. On the other side the senate were discussing the secret gathering of the plebs in a private house—a house, too, that, as it happened, was situated in the Citadel—and the grave danger that threatened liberty. The majority exclaimed that a Servilius Ahala was needed, one who would not exasperate a public enemy by ordering his imprisonment, but would sacrifice a single citizen to end a domestic war. However, they had recourse to a proposal which sounded milder, though its force was identical, namely, that the magistrates should see to it that the republic took no harm by the ruinous devices of Marcus Manlius. Thereupon the consular tribunes and the tribunes of the plebs—for they too, perceiving that their own authority would come to an end with the general liberty, had made their submission to the Fathers—all these men, I say, thereupon took counsel together, what was needful to be done. They could none of them see any way but violence and bloodshed, which would clearly involve a mighty struggle, when Marcus Menenius and Quintus Publilius, tribunes of the plebs, addressed them as follows: “Why do we make a conflict between patricians and certamen facimus, quod civitatis esse adversus unum pestiferum civem debet? Quid cum plebe adgredimur eum quem per ipsam plebem tutius adgredi est ut 7 suis ipse oneratus viribus ruat? Diem dicere ei nobis in animo est. Nihil minus populare quam regnum est. Simul multitudo illa non secum certari viderint et ex advocatis iudices facti erunt et accusatores de plebe patricium reum intuebuntur et regni crimen in medio, nulli magis quam libertati favebunt suae."

A.U.C.
370

XX. Adprobantibus cunctis diem Manlio dicunt. Quod ubi est factum, primo commota plebs est,
 2 utique postquam sordidatum reum viderunt nec cum eo non modo patrum quemquam sed ne cognatos quidem aut adfines, postremo ne fratres quidem A. et T. Manlios, quod ad eum diem nunquam usu venisset, ut in tanto discrimine non et proximi
 3 vestem mutarent: Ap. Claudio in vincula ducto C. Claudium inimicum Claudiamque omnem gentem sordidatam fuisse; consensu opprimi popularem virum, quod primus a patribus ad plebem defecisset.
 4 Cum dies venit, quae praeter coetus multitudinis seditiosasque voces et largitionem et fallax indicium pertinentia proprie ad regni crimen ab accusatoribus obiecta sint reo, apud neminem auctorem invenio;

plebeians out of what ought to be the quarrel of the state with a single pestilent citizen? Why in attacking him do we attack the plebs as well, when it is safer to attack him by the help of this same plebs, that his very strength may bring about his ruin? We propose to summon him to trial. Nothing is less popular than kingly power. As soon as the populace, perceiving that our quarrel is not with them, are changed from supporters into judges, and see that the prosecutors are plebeians, the defendant a patrician, and the accusation that of seeking to set up a kingdom, they will not favour any man at the expense of their own liberty."

XX. This argument won universal approbation, and Manlius was indicted. The first effect of this was to rouse great feeling in the commons, especially when they saw the defendant meanly clad and not attended by a single senator, or even by his kinsmen or connexions, or indeed by his own brothers, Aulus and Titus Manlius. That a man's nearest friends should not join him in assuming mourning in an hour so fraught with danger to him, was something that had never until that day occurred. They remembered that on the imprisonment of Appius Claudius, his enemy Gaius Claudius and all the Claudian family had gone into mourning; and they concluded that there must be a general conspiracy to put down the people's friend because he had been the first to forsake the patricians for the plebs.

The day of the trial came, but I do not find it stated in any authority what facts were alleged by his accusers that bore directly on the charge of plotting to establish a kingdom, except gatherings of the populace and seditious expressions and his

A.U.C.
370

- 5 nec dubito haud parva fuisse, cum damnandi mora plebi non in causa sed in loco fuerit. Illud notandum videtur, ut sciant homines quae et quanta decora foeda cupiditas regni non ingrata solum sed
 6 invisa etiam reddiderit: homines prope quadringentos produxisse dicitur, quibus sine fenore expensas pecunias tulisset, quorum bona venire, quos
 7 duci addictos prohibuisset; ad haec decora quoque belli non commemorasse tantum sed protulisse etiam conspicienda, spolia hostium caesorum ad triginta, dona imperatorum ad quadraginta, in quibus insignes
 8 duas murales coronas, civicas octo; ad hoc servatos ex hostibus cives¹ inter quos C. Servilium magistrum equitum absentem nominatum; et cum ea quoque quae bello gesta essent pro fastigio rerum oratione etiam magnifica, facta dictis acquando, memorasset, nudasse
 9 pectus insigne cicatricibus bello acceptis et identidem Capitolium spectans Iovem deosque alios devocasse ad auxilium fortunarum suarum precatusque² esse ut, quam mentem sibi Capitolinam arcem protegenti ad salutem populi Romani dedissent, eam populo Romano in suo discrimine darent, et orasse singulos universosque ut Capitolium atque arcem intuentes, ut ad deos immortales versi, de se iudicarent.
 10 In campo Martio cum centuriatim populus cita-

¹ cives Ithenanus: ciues produxit (or produx) Ω.

² precatusque Ithenanus: precatumque Ω: peccatumque E.

¹ The Campus Martius, from which they could see the Capitol (cf. § 10).

² A mural crown was conferred on the soldier who was the first to scale the enemy's wall, a civic crown on one who had saved a fellow citizen (Aulus Gellius v. vi. 11).

³ The comitia centuriata being a military organisation might largesses and false witness ; and yet I doubt not they B.C. 384 were of moment, since the reluctance of the plebs to condemn him was not owing to his cause but to the place.¹ One thing appears worthy of remark, that men may know what great and glorious achievements

 a vile lust for regal power rendered not merely thankless but actually hateful. It is said that he brought forward nearly four hundred men to whom he had lent money without interest, thus saving their goods from being sold and their persons from enslavement ;
 that besides this the military distinctions which he not only enumerated but produced for all to see, comprised the spoils of thirty enemies whom he had slain, and some forty decorations from his generals, amongst which were conspicuous two mural and eight civic crowns ;² that he told, besides, of citizens saved from the enemy, and among these named Gaius Servilius, the master of the horse, who was not present. And after rehearsing his services in war, in a speech as magnificent as the height of his achievements and equalling his deeds with its words, he is said to have bared his breast, marked with the scars of battle, and gazing at the Capitol to have called on Jupiter and the other gods to help him, that they might inspire the Roman People in his hour of danger with the same spirit they had given him when he defended the Capitoline Hill ; and to have implored the Romans one and all to fix their eyes on the Capitol and Citadel, and turn to the immortal gods while they judged him.

In the Campus Martius, when the people were being called by centuries,³ and the defendant, not assemble within the pomerium. The meeting referred to in the preceding paragraph was a contio.

A.U.C.
370

- retur et reus ad Capitolium manus tendens ab hominibus ad deos preces avertisset, apparuit tribunis, nisi oculos quoque hominum liberassent tanti memoria decoris, nunquam fore in praeoccupatis
- 11 beneficio animis vero crimini locum. Ita prodicta die in Petelinum lucum extra portam Flumentanam, unde conspectus in Capitolium non esset, concilium populi indictum est. Ibi crimen valuit et obstinatis animis triste iudicium invisumque etiam iudicibus
- 12 factum. Sunt qui per duumviros, qui de perduellione anquirerent creatos, auctores sint damnatum. Tribuni de saxo Tarpeio deiecerunt; locusque idem in uno homine et eximiae gloriae monumentum et poenae ultimae fuit.
- 13 Adiectae mortuo notae sunt: publica una, quod, cum domus eius fuisset ubi nunc aedes atque officina Monetae est, latum ad populum est ne quis
- 14 patricius in arce aut Capitolio habitaret; gentilicia altera, quod gentis Manliae decreto cautum est ne quis deinde M. Manlius vocaretur. Hunc exitum habuit vir, nisi in libera civitate natus esset, me-
- 15 morabilis. Populum brevi, postquam periculum ab eo nullum erat, per se ipsas recordantem virtutes desiderium eius tenuit. Pestilentia etiam brevi consecuta nullis occurrentibus tantae cladis causis ex
- 16 Manliano supplicio magnae parti videri orta: vio-

¹ The Porta Flumentana was at a point in the wall between the Aventine and the Capitoline.

² For another instance of this procedure, see I. xxvi. 5.

³ The temple of Juno Moneta, vowed by Lucius Furius Camillus (345 B.C.) was dedicated June 1st, 344. Money was coined in this temple.

⁴ As a matter of fact, no patrician Marcus Manlius of a later date is known to us.

stretching forth his hands to the Capitol, had turned B.C. 384 from men to make his prayers to the gods, the tribunes clearly saw that unless they could also emancipate men's eyes from the associations of so glorious a deed, no accusation, however true, could ever find lodgment in their grateful hearts. And so they adjourned the day of trial and appointed a council of the people to meet in the Peteline Wood outside the Flumentane Gate,¹ whence no prospect of the Capitol was afforded. There they made good their charge; men steeled their hearts and pronounced a dolorous judgment, abhorrent to the very ones who rendered it. Some authorities assert that he was condemned by duumvirs appointed to deal with a charge of treason.² The tribunes flung him from the Tarpeian Rock, and the same spot served to commemorate extraordinary fame and the extremity of punishment, as experienced by the self-same man.

To his death were added marks of ignominy: one of a public nature, because the people were asked to vote that, since his house had stood where the temple and mint of Moneta now are,³ no patrician might dwell in the Citadel or the Capitol; the other proceeding from his family, in that the Manlian clan made a decree forbidding anyone thenceforth to bear the name of Marcus Manlius.⁴ Such was the end of a man who, had he not been born in a free state, would have left a memorable name. In a short time the people, remembering—now that he was no longer a source of danger—only his good qualities, regretted him. Moreover a pestilence soon ensued, and occasioned a mortality out of all proportion to any visible causes, and this many people ascribed to the execution of Manlius: the Capitol, they said, had latum Capitolium esse sanguine servatoris nec discordi fuisse poenam eius oblatam prope oculis suis, a quo sua templa erepta e manibus hostium essent.

A.U.C.
370

A.U.C.
371

XXI. Pestilentiam inopia frugum et volgatam utriusque mali famam anno insequente multiplex bellum excepit L. Valerio quartum A. Manlio tertium Ser. Sulpicio tertium L. Lucretio,¹ L. Aemilio tertium M. Trebonio tribunis militum consulari potestate. Hostes novi praeter Volscos, velut sorte quadam prope in aeternum exercendo Romano militi dados, Circeiosque et Velitras colonias iam diu molientes defectionem et suspectum Latium Lanuvini etiam, quae fidelissima urbs fuerat, subito exorti. Id patres rati contemptu accidere, quod Veliternis civibus suis tam diu impunita defectio esset, decreverunt ut primo quoque tempore ad populum ferretur de bello eis indicendo. Ad quam militiam quo paratior plebes esset, quinqueviros Pomptino agro dividendo et triumviros Nepete coloniae deducendae creaverunt. Tum, ut bellum iuberent, latum ad populum est et nequiquam dissuadentibus tribunis plebis omnes tribus bellum iusserunt. Apparatum eo anno bellum est, exercitus propter pestilentiam non eductus, eaque cunctatio colonis spatium dederat deprecandi senatum; et magna hominum pars eo ut legatio supplex Romam

¹ Lucretio (or -cio) Ω: Lucretio tertium Glareanus.

¹ Livy has perhaps made a slip in ascribing this action to the tribes, as it was regularly the assembly of centuries which declared war.

been polluted by the blood of its saviour, and the gods had not been pleased that the man who had rescued their temples from the hands of the enemy, should be punished almost under their very eyes. B.C. 384

XXI. The pestilence was succeeded by a scarcity of corn, and in the following year, when the rumour of these two misfortunes had got abroad, by various wars. The consular tribunes were Lucius Valerius (for the fourth time), Aulus Manlius (for the third), Servius Sulpicius (for the third), Lucius Lucretius, Lucius Aemilius (for the third time) and Marcus Trebonius. Besides the Volsci, who had been provided, as it were by a kind of fatality, to furnish perpetual occupation for the Roman arms, and the colonies of Circei and Velitrae, which had long been scheming a rebellion, and the Latins, whose loyalty was suspected, a new enemy suddenly rose up at Lanuvium, a city which until then had been very faithful. Believing that they were now actuated by contempt, on finding the revolt of the Veliterni, who were Roman citizens, to go so long unpunished, the senate decreed that a proposal should be laid before the people, at the earliest possible moment, for declaring war on them; and, to make the plebs readier for this campaign, they appointed five commissioners to divide up the Pomptine land, and three to conduct a colony to Nepete. They then asked the people for a declaration of war, and notwithstanding the opposition of the plebeian tribunes, all the tribes voted for war.¹ Preparations for the campaign were made that year, but owing to the pestilence the army did not take the field. This delay would have given the colonists time to sue the senate for pardon—and in fact a majority of them were in favour of B.C. 383

A.U.C.
371

7 mitteretur inclinabat, ni privato, ut fit, periculo publicum implicitum esset auctoresque defectionis ab Romanis metu, ne soli crimini subiecti piacula irae Romanorum dederentur, avertissent colonias a
8 consiliis pacis. Neque in senatu¹ solum per eos legatio impedita est sed magna pars plebis incitata ut praedatum in agrum Romanum exirent. Haec
9 nova iniuria exturbavit omnem spem pacis. De Praenestinatorum quoque defectione eo anno primum fama exorta; arguentibusque eos Tusculanis et Gabinis et Labicanis, quorum in fines incursatum erat, ita placide ab senatu responsum est ut minus credi de criminibus, quia nollent ea vera esse, appareret.

A.U.C.
372-373

XXII. Insequenti anno Sp. et L. Papirii² novi tribuni militum consulari potestate Velitras legiones duxere, quattuor collegis Ser. Cornelio Maluginensi tertium Q. Servilio C. Sulpicio L. Aemilio quartum,³ ad praesidium urbis et si qui ex Etruria novi motus nuntiarentur—omnia enim inde suspecta erant—
2 relictis. Ad Velitras adversus maiora paene auxilia Praenestinatorum quam ipsam colonorum multitudinem secundo proelio pugnatum est ita ut propinquitas urbis hosti et causa maturioris fugae et unum ex
3 fuga receptaculum esset. Oppidi oppugnatione tribuni abstinuere, quia et anceps erat nec in perniciem coloniae pugnandum censebant. Litterae

¹ in senatu ς : in senatum Ω .² Papirii ς : papirius (or -pyr-) Ω : papilius T.³ quartum ς : quartum tribunis Ω .

sending an embassy to Rome to make submission—B.C. 383
 but danger to the commonwealth was bound up, as often happens, with that of individuals, and the ring-leaders of the revolt were so afraid of the Romans—lest they alone might be charged with the crime and offered up as a sacrifice to Roman indignation—that they turned the colonies away from peaceful counsels. Moreover, not content with merely opposing the embassy in their senate, they egged on a great part of the commons to go out and pillage the Roman lands; and this new outrage destroyed all hope of peace. The Praenestines, too, were that year, for the first time, reported as disloyal; evidence against them was given by the Tusculans, the Gabini, and the Labicani, whose borders they had invaded; but the senate returned so mild an answer that it was evident that they refused to believe in the charges because they wished them not to be true.

XXII. The next year Spurius and Lucius Papirius, B.C.
382-381
 the new consular tribunes, led the levies to Velitrae, while their four colleagues, Servius Cornelius Maluginensis (in his third term), Quintus Servilius, Gaius Sulpicius, and Lucius Aemilius (in his fourth term), remained behind to protect the City and to guard against any fresh commotion which might be reported from Etruria—a quarter from which everything was suspected. Near Velitrae the Romans defeated an army in which auxiliaries from Praeneste almost outnumbered the colonists themselves; but the city was so close at hand that, as it occasioned their early retreat, so it afforded them their only refuge. The tribunes abstained from attacking the place; they were not certain of succeeding, nor did they think it right to aim at the extermination of the colony. In

A.U.C.
372-373

- Romam ad senatum cum victoriae nuntiis acriores in Praenestinum quam in Veliternum hostem missae.
- 4 Itaque ex senatus consulto populique iussu bellum Praenestinis indictum; qui coniuncti Volscis anno insequente Satricum, coloniam populi Romani, pertinaciter a colonis defensam, vi expugnarunt foede-
- 5 que in captis exercuere victoriam. Eam rem aegre passi Romani M. Furium Camillum sextum¹ tribunum militum creavere. Additi collegae A. et L. Postumii Regillenses² ac L. Furius cum L. Lucretio et M. Fabio Ambusto.
- 6 Volseum bellum M. Furio extra ordinem decretum; adiutor ex tribunis sorte L. Furius datur, non tam e re publica quam ut collegae materia ad omnem laudem esset et publice, quod rem temeritate eius prolapsam restituit et privatim, quod ex errore gratiam potius eius sibi quam suam gloriam petiit.³
- 7 Exactae iam aetatis Camillus erat, comitiisque iurare parato in verba excusandae valetudini solita⁴ consensus populi restiterat; sed vegetum ingenium in vivido pectore vigeat virebatque integris sensibus, et civiles iam res haud magnopere obeuntem bella
- 8 excitabant. Quattuor legionibus quaternum milium

¹ sextum (vi) Ω: vi (or iii) P: iii O? E: septimum (vii) ⚭ Drakenborch.

² Regillenses Mommsen C.I.L. 1¹ p. 444 marg.: regilienses Ω: religienses UHDLA.

³ petiit ⚭; petit Ω.

⁴ solita Rhenanus: solitae (or -te) Ω: litae (or -te) HDTLA.

BOOK VI. XXII. 3-8

the letter which they sent to the senate in Rome, B.C.
382-381 announcing the victory, they were more severe upon the enemies from Praeneste than upon those of Velitrae.

And so, by resolution of the senate and popular enactment, war was proclaimed against the people of Praeneste; who, uniting in the following year with the Volsci, attacked the Roman colony of Satricum, and having carried it, despite the obstinate resistance of the colonists, abused their victory by cruel treatment of the captives. This incensed the Romans, and they elected Marcus Furius Camillus tribune of the soldiers, for the sixth time. To be his colleagues they gave him Aulus and Lucius Postumius Regillensis and Lucius Furius, together with Lucius Lucretius and Marcus Fabius Ambustus.

The Volscian war was entrusted, out of the regular course, to Marcus Furius. Of the other tribunes, Lucius Furius was assigned him by lot for his assistant, not so much (it should seem) for the good of the commonwealth, as that he might be the source of all honour to his colleague; who gained it in his public capacity because he made good what the other's rashness had lost, and as a man because he used the error of Lucius to earn his gratitude rather than glory for himself. Camillus was now extremely old. At the election he was prepared to excuse himself by taking the customary oath on the score of health, had not the unanimous wishes of the people prevented him. But a lusty spirit flourished in his sturdy breast, and his senses were as keen as ever; and though he no longer much concerned himself with politics, wars excited him. He enrolled four legions, each of four thousand men, appointed scriptis, exercitu indicto ad portam Esquilinam in posteram diem, ad Satricum profectus. Ibi eum expugnatores coloniae haudquaquam perculsi, fidentes militum numero, quo aliquantum praestabant opperie-9 bantur. Postquam appropinquare Romanos senserunt, extemplo in aciem procedunt, nihil dilaturi quin periculum summae rerum facerent: ita paucitati hostium nihil artes imperatoris unici, quibus solis confiderent, profuturas esse.

XXIII. Idem ardor et in Romano exercitu erat et in altero duce, nec praesentis dimicationis fortunam ulla res praeterquam unius viri consilium atque imperium morabatur, qui occasionem iuvandarum ratione virium trahendo bello quaerebat.
 2 Eo magis hostis instare nec iam pro castris tantum suis explicare aciem sed procedere in medium campi et vallo prope hostium signa inferendo superbam
 3 fiduciam virium ostentare. Id aegre patiebatur Romanus miles, multo aegrius alter ex tribunis militum, L. Furius, ferox cum aetate et ingenio tum multitudinis ex incertissimo sumentis animos
 4 spe inflatus. Hic per se iam milites incitatos insuper instigabat elevando, qua una poterat, aetate auctoritatem collegae, iuvenibus bella data dictitans et cum corporibus vigere et deflorescere animos;
 5 cunctatorem ex acerrimo bellatore factum et, qui adveniens castra urbesque primo impetu rapere sit the army to assemble on the following day at the Esquiline Gate, and marched on Satricum. There the conquerors of the colony were waiting for him, undismayed, for they confided in their numbers, in which they possessed a considerable superiority. On perceiving the approach of the Romans they formed up at once. It was their purpose to engage immediately in a decisive battle; for so the numerical weakness of their enemies would derive no help from the skill of their unique commander, which constituted—so they assumed—their sole reliance.

XXIII. There was the same ardour in the Roman army, and in one of its generals. The hazard of an immediate battle was only postponed by the wisdom and the authority of one man, who sought an opportunity to supplement his resources with strategy, by prolonging the campaign. This made the enemy the more urgent, and, no longer content with deploying their line before the camp, they advanced into the middle of the field, and, marching up almost to the rampart of the Romans, displayed the proud confidence which their strength gave them. The Roman soldiers were mortified at this, and even more mortified was one of their two tribunes, Lucius Furius. His youth and native disposition made him head strong, and the utterly baseless enthusiasm of the rank and file filled him with assurance. The soldiers were already in a state of excitement, but he further instigated them by disparaging his colleague in the only possible way, on the score of age. Wars, he insisted, were the province of youth; the growth and decay of the spirit kept pace with those of the body; the most energetic of soldiers was become a procrastinator, and he who had been wont to storm a camp

B.C.
382–381

- solitus, eum residem intra vallum tempus terere,
 quid accessurum suis decessurumve hostium viribus 6 sperantem? Quam occasionem, quod tempus, quem insidiis instrumentem¹ locum? Frigere ac torpere 7 senis consilia. Sed Camillo cum vitae satis tum gloriae esse; quid attinere cum mortali corpore uno civitatis, quam immortalem esse deceat, pati consenescere vires?
- 8 His sermonibus tota in se averterat castra, et cum omnibus locis posceretur pugna, "Sustinere" inquit, "M. Furi, non possumus impetum militum, et hostis, cuius animos cunctando auximus, iam
 minime toleranda superbia insultat; cede unus omnibus et patere te vinci consilio ut maturius bello 9 vincas." Ad ea Camillus, quae bella suo unius auspicio gesta ad eam diem essent, negare in eis neque se neque populum Romanum aut consilii sui aut fortunae paenituisse; nunc scire se collegam habere iure imperioque parem, vigore aetatis prae-10 stantem; itaque se quod ad exercitum attineat, regere consuesse, non regi: collegae imperium se non posse impedire. Dis bene iuvantibus ageret 11 quod e re publica duceret: aetati suae se veniam eam² petere, ne in prima acie esset; quae senis munia in bello sint, iis se non defuturum. Id a

¹ instrumentem Ω: instruendis Gron.: instruendis quaerentem Alschevski.

² eam Tanaquil Faber: etiam Ω.

or a city on the first approach, was sitting still and wasting time behind intrenchments. What accession to his own strength did he look for, or what diminution of the enemy's? What opportunity, what favourable moment, what ground for an ambush was he making ready? The old man's strategy was cold and torpid. But why, though Camillus had had enough both of life and of glory, should they permit the state, which ought to be immortal, to sink into decrepitude in company with the mortal body of one man?

B.C.
382-381

When he had won over the entire army by these speeches, and the men were everywhere demanding battle, he said to his colleague: "Marcus Furius, we can no longer resist the enthusiasm of the soldiers; and the enemy, whose courage we have augmented by our delay, is insulting us with an arrogance no longer to be endured. Give way, for you are alone against us all, and suffer yourself to be overcome in counsel, that you may overcome the sooner in war." To this Camillus replied that in the wars which up to that day had been conducted under his sole auspices neither the Roman People nor himself had repented of his strategy or fortune; he was aware that he had now a colleague of equal commission and authority, and of more vigorous years; and so, although—as regarded the army—he was accustomed not to be governed but to govern, yet he had no power to thwart the commands of his associate. Let him proceed, with Heaven's blessing, to do what he thought best for the commonwealth: for his own grey hairs he begged this favour, that he might not be assigned to the front; of such duties as belonged to an old man he would not be dis immortalibus precari ne qui casus suum consilium laudabile efficiat.

- 12 Nec ab hominibus salutaris sententia nec a dis tam piae preces auditae sunt. Primam aciem auctor pugnae instruit, subsidia Camillus firmat validamque stationem pro castris opponit; ipse edito loco spectator intentus in eventum alieni consilii constitit. XXIV. Simul primo concursu concrepuere arma,
2 hostis dolo non metu pedem rettulit. Lenis ab tergo clivus erat inter aciem et castra; et, quod multitudo suppeditabat, aliquot validas cohortes in castris armatas instructasque reliquerant, quae inter commissum iam certamen, ubi vallo appropinquasset
3 hostis, erumperent. Romanus cedentem hostem effuse sequendo in locum iniquum pertractus opportunus huic eruptioni fuit; versus itaque in victorem terror et novo hoste et supina valle Romanam inclinavit
4 aciem. Instant Volsci recentes qui e castris impetum fecerant; integrant et illi pugnam qui simulata cesserant fuga. Iam non recipiebat se Romanus miles sed immemor recentis ferociae veterisque decoris terga passim dabat atque effuso cursu castra re-
5 petebat, cum Camillus subiectus ab circumstantibus in equum et raptim subsidiis oppositis "Haec est" inquit, "milites, pugna, quam poposcistis? Quis
6 homo, quis deus est quem accusare possitis? Vestra negligent. One thing he entreated of the immortal gods : that no mischance might occur, to make his own appear to have been the wiser plan. But neither did men heed these salutary words, nor the immortal gods his loyal prayers. The man responsible for the engagement marshalled the battle-line. Camillus provided adequate supports, and stationed a strong out-guard before the camp ; he then took up his post on an eminence, and watched intently for the issue of another's strategy. XXIV. At the very instant of the first clash of arms the enemy gave ground, not out of fear, but guile. Behind them the ground sloped gently up from the battle-line to their camp ; and having plenty of men they had left a few strong cohorts armed and drawn up within the camp, which were to sally forth when the fighting had got under way, and the Romans had approached the rampart. The Romans pursued the retreating enemy without order, and were drawn into an unfavourable position, where this attack could be made upon them with advantage. Thus the victors were threatened in their turn, and, what with the new foe and the declivity, the Roman line gave way. They were closely pressed by the fresh Volsci who had made the sortie, and those, too, who had pretended flight renewed the battle. And now the Roman soldiers were no longer retiring in order, but regardless of their late impetuosity and their ancient fame, had turned their backs and were everywhere in full flight towards the camp ; when Camillus was lifted into the saddle by his attendants, and rapidly throwing his reserves into the fight, "Soldiers," he cried, "is this the battle you demanded? What man, what god is there, whom

B.C.
382-381

A.U.C.
372-373

illa temeritas, vestra ignavia haec est. Secuti alium ducem sequimini nunc Camillum et quod ductu meo soletis vincite. Quid vallum et castra spectatis?
Neminem vestrum illa nisi victorem receptura sunt."

- 7 Pudor primo tenuit effusos; inde, ut circumagi
signa obvertique aciem viderunt in hostem, et dux, praeterquam quod tot insignis triumphis, etiam aetate venerabilis inter prima signa ubi pluribus labor periculumque erat se offerebat, increpare singuli se quisque et alios, et adhortatio in vicem totam alacri 8 clamore pervasit aciem. Neque alter tribunus rei defuit sed missus a collega restituyente peditum aciem ad equites, non castigando—ad quam rem leviorem auctorem eum culpaе societas fecerat—
sed ab imperio totus ad preces versus orare singulos
universosque ut se reum fortunae eius diei crimine 9 eximerent: "Abnuente ac prohibente collega te-meritati¹ me omnium potius socium quam unius prudenciae dedi. Camillus in utraque vestra fortuna suam gloriam videt; ego, ni restituitur pugna, quod miserrimum est, fortunam cum omnibus infamiam 10 solus sentiam." Optimum visum est in fluctuante acie² tradi equos et pedestri pugna invadere hostem.
Eunt insignes armis animisque qua premi parte

¹ temeritati *T*²—: temeritatis Ω: temeritatos H.

² in fluctuante acie Heerwagen: in fluctuantem aciem
(aciem omitted by H) Ω: inter fluctuantem aciem Gronovius.

you could accuse? Yours was the rashness then, now the infamy is yours. You have followed another leader: follow now Camillus, and, as your habit is when I am leading, conquer. Why do you look on the rampart and the camp? Not one of you shall find entrance there, save as a victor."

B.C.
382-381

A sense of shame at first checked their headlong flight; then, as they saw the standards face about and the line form up against the enemy, while their general, distinguished for his many triumphs and rendered venerable by his age, exposed himself at the front amidst the ensigns, where the fighting and the danger were the greatest, they began each and every one to cry out against themselves and their fellows, and their mutual encouragements ran through the entire army in a ringing cheer. Nor was the other tribune behindhand, but being sent by his colleague—who was re-forming the line of foot—to rally the horse, he did not chide them—for his share in their fault would have made this of little use—but turning wholly from commands to entreaties, he besought them one and all to save him from the guilt of that day's mishap, for which he was responsible. "Notwithstanding," he said, "the refusal and the opposition of my colleague, I gave my adhesion to the general recklessness in preference to the prudence of one man. Camillus sees glory for himself, whichever way your fortune turns; but I, if the battle is not restored, shall experience the utter misery of sharing with everybody the disaster, while enduring the infamy alone." It seemed best, as the battle-line was wavering, to dismiss the horses and attack the enemy on foot. Conspicuous for their arms and their courage, they advanced where

A.U.C.
372-373

maxime peditum copias vident. Nihil neque apud
duces neque apud milites remittitur a summo cer-11 tamine animi. Sensit ergo eventus virtutis enixae opem, et Volsci, qua modo simulato metu cesserant, ea in veram fugam effusi, magna pars et in ipso
certamine et post in fuga caesi, ceteri in castris, quae capta eodem impetu sunt; plures tamen capti quam occisi.

XXV. Ubi in recensendis captivis cum Tusculani aliquot noscitantur, secreti ab aliis ad tribunos adducuntur percontantibusque fassi publico consilio
2 se militasse. Cuius tam vicini belli metu Camillus motus extemplo se Romam captivos ducturum ait,
ne patres ignari sint Tusculanos ab societate descisse:
castris exercituique interim, si videatur, praesit col-3 lega. Documento unus dies fuerat, ne sua consilia melioribus praeferret; nec tamen aut ipsi aut in exercitu cuiquam satis placato animo Camillus laturus
culpam eius videbatur, qua data in tam praecipitem
4 casum res publica esset; et cum in exercitu tum Romae constans omnium fama erat, cum varia fortuna in Volscis gesta res esset, adversae pugnae fugaeque in L. Furio culpam, secundae decus omne 5 penes M. Furium esse. Introductis in senatum captivis cum bello persequendos Tusculanos patres

¹ Niebuhr thinks that this battle was a pure invention, for there is no indication that it had any effect: Satricum was not taken, nor was a triumph decreed.

they saw the foot-soldiers hardest pressed. Neither generals nor soldiers relaxed their utmost efforts, and the help afforded by their brave exertions was felt in the result. The Volsci fled in a genuine panic over the ground where they had lately pretended fear. Great numbers of them were slain both in the battle itself and in the flight which followed; the others were cut down in the camp, which was captured in the same charge; but more were made prisoners than were slain.¹

B.C.
382-381

XXV. In taking account of the prisoners, they recognized some as being Tusculans. These were separated from the rest and brought before the tribunes, to whom they confessed, on being questioned, that they had served at the bidding of the state. The danger of so near a war disturbed Camillus, who declared that he would straightway carry the prisoners to Rome, that the Fathers might not be kept in ignorance how the Tusculans had broken the alliance. In the meantime he proposed that his colleague should, if agreeable, take charge of the camp and the army. A single day had taught Lucius Furius not to prefer his own to wiser counsels, yet neither he nor anyone in the army supposed that Camillus would condone his fault, which had plunged the commonwealth into such desperate peril; and everybody, not in the army only, but also in Rome, agreed in saying, that in the ups and downs of the Volscian war, the responsibility for the defeat and flight lay with Lucius Furius, and all the credit for the victory with Camillus. But when the prisoners had been introduced into the senate, and the Fathers, having decided that they must make war on Tusculum, had

A.U.C.
372-373

censuissent Camilloque id bellum mandassent, adiutorem sibi ad eam rem unum petit permissoque ut ex collegis optaret quem vellet, contra spem 6 omnium L. Furium optavit; qua moderatione animi cum collegae levavit infamiam, tum sibi gloriam ingentem peperit.

Nec fuit cum Tusculanis bellum: pace constanti vim Romanam arcuerunt¹ quam armis non poterant.
7 Intrantibus fines Romanis non demigratum ex propinquis itineri² locis, non cultus agrorum intermissus, patentibus portis urbis togati obviam frequentes imperatoribus processere; commeatus exercitui comiter in castra ex urbe et ex agris de-
8 vehitur. Camillus castris ante portas positus, eademne forma pacis quae in agris ostentaretur etiam intra
9 moenia esset scire cupiens, ingressus urbem ubi patentes ianuas et tabernis apertis proposita omnia in medio vidit intentosque opifices suo quemque operi et ludos litterarum strepere discentium vocibus ac repletas semitas inter vulgus aliud puerorum et mulierum huc atque illuc euntium, qua quemque
10 suorum usum causae ferrent, nihil usquam non pavidis modo sed ne mirantibus quidem simile, circumspiciebat omnia, anquirens³ oculis ubinam
11 bellum fuisset; adeo nec amotae rei usquam nec oblatae ad tempus vestigium ullum erat, sed ita

¹ arcuerunt E³T¹ (or T²) Dr: arcuerant PFUB: arguerunt MEHTDLA.

² itineri ς : itineris Ω : itineribus ς .

³ anquirens Gebhard: inquirens Ω .

designated Camillus to conduct it, he requested that he might have a single lieutenant to assist him, and being permitted to select any one of his colleagues whom he might desire, contrary to everybody's expectation he selected Lucius Furius—an instance of magnanimity which, while it lightened the disgrace of his colleague, also brought great honour to himself.

B.C.
382-381

But no war was, in fact, waged with the Tusculans : by their steadfast adherence to peace they saved themselves from violation by the Romans, as they could not have done by resorting to arms. When the Romans entered their territory, they did not withdraw from the places near the line of march, nor break off their labour in the fields ; the gates of their city stood wide open ; the citizens, wearing the toga, came out in great numbers to meet the generals ; and provisions for the army were obligingly brought into the camp from the city and the farms. Camillus set up his camp before the gates, and desirous of knowing whether the same aspect of peace prevailed within the walls that was displayed in the country, entered the city and beheld the house-doors open, the shops with their shutters off and all their wares exposed, the craftsmen all busy at their respective trades, the schools buzzing with the voices of the scholars, crowds in the streets, and women and children going about amongst the rest, this way and that, as their several occasions called them—with never anywhere an indication of surprise, much less of fear. He looked everywhere for any visible evidence that a war had been on foot ; but there was no sign that anything had been either removed or brought out for the moment ; everything looked so undisturbed and omnia constanti tranquilla pace ut eo vix fama belli perlata videri posset.

A.U.C.
372-373

- XXVI. Victus igitur patientia hostium senatum eorum vocari iussit. "Soli adhuc" inquit, "Tusculani, vera arma verasque vires quibus ab ira 2 Romanorum vestra tutaremini invenistis. Ite Romam ad senatum; aestimabunt patres, utrum plus ante poenae an nunc veniae meriti sitis; non praecipiam gratiam publici beneficii; deprecandi potestatem a me habueritis; precibus eventum vestris senatus quem videbitur dabit."
- 3 Postquam Romam Tusculani venerunt senatusque paulo ante fidelium sociorum maestus in vestibulo curiae est conspectus, moti extemplo patres vocari eos iam tum hospitaliter magis quam hostiliter
 4 iussere. Dictator Tusculanus ita verba fecit: "Quibus bellum indixistis intulistisque, patres conscripti, sicut nunc videtis nos stantes in vestibulo curiae vestrae, ita armati paratique obviam imperatoribus
 5 legionibusque vestris processimus. Hic noster, hic plebis nostrae habitus fuit eritque semper, nisi si quando a vobis proque vobis arma acceperimus. Gratias agimus et ducibus vestris et exercitibus, quod oculis magis quam auribus crediderunt, et ubi
 6 nihil hostile erat ne ipsi quidem fecerunt. Pacem, quam nos praestitimus, eam a vobis petimus; bellum peaceful that it seemed scarce credible that so much as a rumour of war should have come there. B.C.

¹ For a similar play on words see I. lviii. 8.

382-381

XXVI. Overcome therefore by the enemy's submissiveness, he commanded their senate to be called. "Men of Tusculum," he said, "until now you alone have discovered the right weapons and the right resources with which to defend your possessions from the resentment of the Romans. Go to Rome, to the senate; the Fathers will determine whether you have deserved more punishment hitherto or pardon now. I will not forestall them by accepting your gratitude for a favour that must be granted by the state; from me you shall have an opportunity to solicit mercy; the answer to your suit must be such as the senate sees fit to make."

When the Tusculans arrived in Rome, and the senators of a people who before had been faithful allies appeared in the vestibule of the Curia, covered with dejection, the Fathers were straightway moved, and in a spirit that had already more in it of hospitality than hostility¹ bade them be at once admitted. The Tusculan dictator thus addressed them: "Though you declared war on us and invaded our country, Conscrip Fathers, we went forth to meet your generals and your legions armed and accoutred exactly as you now behold us standing in the entrance of your senate-house. Such has ever been our garb and the garb of our people—ay, and ever shall be save at such times as we have been armed by you and for your defence. We give thanks to your commanders and your armies, since they have believed their eyes more than their ears, and where they encountered no hostility, themselves have showed none. The peace we have used towards you, we ask

A.U.C.
372-373

eo, sicubi est, avertatis precamur; in nos quid arma polleant vestra, si patiendo experiundum est, inermes experiemur. Haec mens nostra est¹—di immortales 7 faciant—tam felix quam pia. Quod ad crimina attinet quibus moti bellum indixistis, etsi revicta rebus verbis confutare nihil attinet, tamen, etiam si vera sint, vel fateri nobis ea, cum tam evidenter paenituerit, tutum censemus. Peccetur in vos, 8 dum digni sitis, quibus ita satisfiat.” Tantum fere verborum Tusculanis factum. Pacem in praesentia nec ita multo post civitatem etiam impetraverunt. Ab Tusculo legiones reductae.

A.U.C.
374

XXVII. Canillus, consilio et virtute in Volscis bello, felicitate in Tusculana expeditione, utrobique singulari adversus collegam patientia et moderatione
 2 insignis, magistratu abiit creatis tribunis militaribus in insequentem annum L. et P. Valeriis—Lucio quintum, Publio tertium—et C. Sergio tertium L. Menenio² iterum, P. Papirio, Ser. Cornelio Maluginense. Censoribus quoque eguit annus maxime
 3 propter incertam famam aeris alieni, adgravantibus summam etiam invidiae eius³ tribunis plebis, cum ab iis elevaretur, quibus fide magis quam fortuna debentium laborare creditum videri expediebat.

¹ nostra est Ω: nostra sit Karsten (after H. J. Mueller).

² L. (lucio) Menenio A Sigonius: lucinio Menenio F: lic (or lit-)inio menenio Ω. There is great uncertainty regarding the names, and in view of the reading of Ω here and at chap. 5 § 7, and chap. 31 § 1, it appears not improbable that Livy included Licinius in the list.

³ invidiae eius Ω Walters and Conway: invidiosius Madrig: invidiae causa Perizonius: invidiose Duker.

¹ i. e. the honour done you by our confiding in your mercy should outweigh the injury.

of you in return; direct your war, we beseech you, to that quarter where war, if anywhere, exists; if we must try, by suffering, what your arms can achieve against ourselves, we will try unarmed. Such is our resolution; Heaven send it be not less fortunate than loyal. As to the charges which stirred you to declare a war, though it skills not to disprove with words what facts have already confuted, still, even were they true, we think we might safely plead guilty to them, since our repentance is so evident. Let men wrong you, so long as you continue worthy to receive such amends."¹ To this purport was the speech of the Tusculans. They were granted peace for the present, and not long after were even admitted to be citizens. The legions were withdrawn from Tusculum.

XXVII. Renowned for his strategy and courage in the Volscian war and his success in the expedition against Tusculum, and for his singular gentleness and generosity on both occasions towards his colleague, Camillus laid down his office, after announcing the election of military tribunes for the ensuing year. The successful candidates were Lucius and Publius Valerius (Lucius for the fifth and Publius for the third time), Gaius Sergius (for the third time), Lucius Menenius (for the second time), Publius Papirius, and Servius Cornelius Maluginensis. There was need also this year of censors, chiefly on account of the uncertain reports which were going about in regard to debt. The tribunes of the plebs even exaggerated the extent of this grievance, whereas it was understated by those who were interested in having it appear that loans were more in danger from the bad faith than the bad fortune of the debtors. The censors

B.C.
382-381

B.C. 380

A.B.C.
371

4 Creati censores C. Sulpicius Camerinus Sp. Postumius Regillensis, coeptaque iam res morte Postumi, quia
 collegam suffici censori religio erat, interpellata
 5 est. Igitur cum Sulpicius abdicasset se magistratu censores alii vitio creati non gesserunt magistratum;
 tertios creari velut dis non accipientibus in eum 6 annum censuram religiosum fuit. Eam vero ludi-ficationem plebis tribuni ferendam negabant: fugere senatum testes tabulas publicas census cuiusque, quia nolint conspici summam aeris alieni, quæ in-dicatura sit demersam partem a parte civitatis, cum interim obaeratam plebem obiectari aliis atque aliis 7 hostibus. Passim iam sine ullo discrimine bella quaeri: ab Antio Satricum, ab Satrico Velitras, inde Tusculum legiones ductas; Latinis Hernicis Prænestinis iam intentari arma civium magis quam hostium odio, ut in armis terant plebem nec respirare in urbe aut per otium libertatis meminisse sinant aut consistere in contione, ubi aliquando audiant vocem tribuniciam de levando fenore et fine¹ aliarum in-8 iuriarum agentem. Quod si sit animus plebi memor patrum libertatis, se nec addici quemquam civem
 Romanum ob creditam pecuniam passuros neque

¹ fine 5: finem Ω Walters and Conway.

¹ Cf. v. xxxi. 6.

chosen were Gaius Sulpicius Camerinus and Spurius Postumius Regillensis, and they had already set about their task, when it was interrupted by the death of Postumius; for there were religious scruples against replacing the colleague of a censor.¹ So then, Sulpicius resigned, and other censors were elected, but, owing to a defect in the election, did not serve. The senate could not bring itself to proceed to a third election, being persuaded that the gods would permit no censorship that year. But this irresolution the tribunes characterized as an intolerable mockery of the plebs. The senate, they said, was seeking to avoid the evidence of witnesses and public records regarding the property of every man, because they were unwilling it should be seen how great was the volume of debt, which would show that half of the state had been ruined by the other half, while the debt-ridden plebs were in the meantime being exposed to one enemy after another; wars were now sought indiscriminately, far and wide; from Antium the legions had been marched to Satricum, from Satricum to Velitrae, from there to Tusculum; now it was the Latins, the Hernici and the Praenestini who were threatened with attack, more out of hatred of Rome's citizens than of her enemies. The object was to wear the plebeians out with service and give them no time to take breath in the City, or leisure to bethink them of liberty or to stand in the assembly, where they might sometimes hear the voice of a tribune urging the reduction of interest and the removal of their other grievances. But if the plebs had the spirit to recall their fathers' liberty, they would allow no Roman citizen to be bound to a creditor, nor any levy to be held, until the amount of dilectum haberi, donec inspecto aere alieno initaque ratione minuendi eius sciat unus quisque quid sui, quid alieni sit, supersit sibi liberum corpus an id quoque nervo debeat.

A.U.C.
371

- 9 Merces seditionis proposita confestim seditionem excitavit. Nam et addicebantur multi, et ad Praenestini famam belli novas legiones scribendas patres censuerant; quae utraque simul auxilio tribunicio 10 et consensu plebis impediri coepta; nam neque duci addictos tribuni sinebant neque iuniores nomina dabant. Cum patribus minor in praesens¹ cura creditae pecuniae iuris exsequendi quam dilectus esset—quippe iam a Praeneste profectos hostes in 11 agro Gabino² consedissee nuntiabatur—interim tribunos plebis fama ea ipsa inritaverat magis ad susceptum certamen quam deterruerat; neque aliud ad seditionem extinguendam in urbe quam prope inlatum moenibus ipsis bellum valuit.

XXVIII. Nam cum esset Praenestinis nuntiatum nullum exercitum conscriptum Romae, nullum ducem certum esse, patres ac plebem in semet ipsos versos,
2 occasionem rati duces eorum raptim agmine acto³ pervastatis protinus agris ad portam Collinam signa
3 intulere. Ingens in urbe trepidatio fuit. Conclamatum ad arma, concursumque in muros adque⁴

¹ in praesens Stroth: praesens Ω .

² Gabino Iac. Gronovius: Sabino Ω .

³ acto ζ Sigonius: facto Ω .

⁴ adque Gronovius: atque Ω . (but *A*² or *A*³ has written ad or in).

¹ i.e., to their creditors, to work out their debts.

indebtedness had been examined and a plan for B.C. 380 lessening it put into operation, that every man might know what was his own and what another's, and whether his person was still free, or whether even that was owing to the gaol.

The reward held out to sedition soon brought sedition to a head. For many were being bound over,¹ and the senate had voted to enlist new levies on the rumour of hostilities at Praeneste. Both these proceedings began at the same time to be interfered with by the exercise of the tribunician protection and the common action of the plebs; for the tribunes would not allow those who had been bound over to be led away, nor would the young men give in their names. The patricians were for the moment less concerned with enforcing the law of debt than with the levy—not unnaturally, since the enemy were reported as having already set out from Praeneste and encamped in the territory of Gabii—but on the tribunes of the plebs this intelligence had acted more as an incentive to the struggle they had undertaken than as a deterrent, and the only thing that was able to allay the quarrel in the City was the approach of the enemy to its very walls.

XXVIII. For when the Praenestini were informed that no army had been enrolled in Rome, that there was no one definitely in command, that patricians and plebeians had turned against each other, their leaders concluded that their opportunity had come, and quickly putting their troops in motion, they devastated the fields along their line of march and advanced against the Colline Gate. Great was the consternation in the City. The call to arms was given, and men hurried to the walls and gates. They

A.U.C.
374

- portas est, tandemque ab seditione ad bellum versi 4 dictatorem T. Quinctium Cincinnatum creavere. Is magistrum equitum A. Sempronium Atratinum dixit.
 Quod ubi auditum est—tantus eius magistratus terror erat,—simul hostes a moenibus recessere et iuniores Romani ad edictum sine retractatione convenere.
- 5 Dum conscribitur Romae exercitus, castra interim
 hostium haud procul Allia flumine posita; inde
 agrum late populantes fatalem se urbi Romanae 6 locum cepisse inter se iactabant: similem pavorem inde ac fugam fore ac bello Gallico fuerit; etenim si diem contactum religione insignemque nomine
 eius loci timeant Romani, quanto magis Alliensi die Alliam ipsam, monumentum tantae cladis, refor-midaturos? Species profecto iis¹ ibi truces Gallorum 7 sonumque vocis in oculis atque auribus fore. Has inanum rerum inanes ipsas volventes cogitationes fortunae loci delegaverant spes suas. Romani contra, ubicumque esset Latinus hostis, satis scire
 eum esse quem ad Regillum lacum devictum centum 8 annorum pace obnoxia² tenuerint: locum insignem memoria cladis inritaturum se potius ad delendam
 memoriam dedecoris, quam ut timorem faciat, ne 9 qua terra sit nefasta victoriae suae; quin ipsi sibi
 Galli si offerantur illo loco, se ita pugnatos ut
 Romae pugnauerint in repetenda patria ut postero

¹ iis Weissenborn: hiis A: his Ω: hic *D*³ *A*³ 5.² obnoxia Ω: obnoxium U Haggström.

had turned at last from domestic strife to war, and B.C. 380 proceeded to make Titus Quinctius Cincinnatus dictator, who named Aulus Sempronius Atratinus master of the horse. No sooner was this known—so great was the terror the dictatorship inspired—than the enemy at once withdrew from before the walls, and the Romans of military age assembled without offering objection, in accordance with the edict.

While the army was being enrolled at Rome, the enemy had gone into camp not far from the Allia.
 From this centre they pillaged in all directions, and boasted to one another that they had occupied a position that was fraught with fate for the City of Rome; there would be another rout there like the one in the Gallic war; for if the Romans feared a day infected with evil omen and marked it with the name of that place, how much more than the Day of the Allia would they dread the Allia itself, that memorial of their great defeat? They were sure to behold there apparitions of ruthless Gauls, and to have the sound of their voices in their ears. Indulging these idle speculations on idle themes, they had rested their hopes on the fortune of the place. The Romans on the other hand were well assured that wherever their Latin enemy was, he was one whom they had conquered at Lake Regillus and had held in peaceable subjection for a hundred years; a place notorious for the memory of disaster would rather inspire them to wipe out the recollection of the disgrace than cause them to fear that any ground was inauspicious for their victory; nay, if the Gauls themselves should confront them on that spot, they would fight as they had fought at Rome in recovering

A.U.C.
374

die ad Gabios, tunc cum effecerint ne quis hostis qui moenia Romana intrasset nuntium secundae adversaeque fortunae domum perferret.

XXIX. His utrimque animis ad Alliam ventum est. Dictator Romanus, postquam in conspectu hostes erant instructi intentique, "videsne tu" inquit, "A. Semproni, loci fortuna illos fretos ad Alliam constitisse? Nec illis di immortales certioris quicquam fiduciae maiorisve quod sit auxilii dederint. At tu, fretus armis animisque, concitatis equis invade mediam aciem; ego cum legionibus in turbatos trepidantesque inferam signa. Adeste, di testes foederis, et expetite poenas debitas simul vobis violatis nobisque per vestrum numen deceptis." Non equitem, non peditem sustinuerunt Praenestini. 3 Primo impetu ac clamore dissipati ordines sunt; dein, postquam nullo loco constabat acies, terga vertunt consternatique et praeter castra etiam suo pavoris praelati non prius se ab effuso cursu sistunt, 4 quam in conspectu Praeneste fuit. Ibi ex fuga dissipati¹ locum quem tumultuario opere communirent capiunt ne, si intra moenia se recepissent, ex templo ureretur ager depopulatisque omnibus obsidio 5 urbi inferretur. Sed postquam direptis ad Alliam castris victor Romanus aderat, id quoque munimentum relictum; et vix moenia tuta rati oppido 6 se Praeneste includunt. Octo praeterea oppida their City and on the following day at Gabii, when B.C. 380 they left no enemy who had entered the walls of Rome, to bear home tidings either of weal or woe.

¹ dissipati Ω: dissipata Mudvig: dissipata contracti Walters and Conway (note).

Such were the feelings on either side when the Romans arrived at the Allia. As they came within sight of the enemy, drawn up and eager for the fray, the dictator addressed Sempronius. "Do you see," he said, "how they have made their stand at the Allia, putting their trust in the fortune of the place? We shall find the immortal gods have given them no surer grounds for confidence nor any more substantial help. But do you confide in arms and valour, and charge their centre at the gallop; I, with the legions, will attack them when they are in disorder and confusion. Be with us, gods of the treaty, and exact the penalties due to you for the injury you have suffered and to us for the deception put upon us in your holy name!" The men of Praeneste could cope with neither horse nor foot. Their ranks were broken at the first shout and charge; then, as their line yielded at every point, they turned and fled, and in their confusion were carried even beyond their own camp; neither did they check their headlong flight until they had come within sight of Praeneste. There the scattered remnants of the rout took up a position which lent itself to hasty fortification, lest, if they sought refuge within the walls, they might immediately find the torch put to their crops, and, after losing everything, be subjected to a siege. But no sooner had the victorious Romans appeared, fresh from plundering the camp on the Allia, than they abandoned these defences also, and, regarding even walls as little enough protection, immured themselves in the town of Praeneste. There were eight erant sub dicione Praenestinorum. Ad ea circumlatum bellum deincepsque haud magno certamine captis Velitras exercitus ductus. Eae quoque ex-7 pugnatae. Tum ad caput belli Praeneste ventum.

A.U.C.
374

 8 Id non vi, sed per deditionem receptum est. T. Quinctius semel acie victor, binis castris hostium, novem oppidis vi captis, Praeneste in deditionem accepto Romam revertit triumphansque signum Praeneste devectum Iovis Imperatoris in Capitolium
 9 tulit. Dedicatum est inter cellam Iovis ac Minervae tabulaque sub eo fixa, monumentum rerum gestarum, his ferme incisa litteris fuit: "Iuppiter atque divi omnes hoc dederunt, ut T. Quinctius dictator oppida 10 novem caperet." Die vicesimo quam creatus erat dictatura se abdicavit.

A.U.C.
375

XXX. Comititia inde habita tribunorum militum consulari potestate, quibus aequatus patriciorum
 2 plebeiorumque numerus. Ex patribus creati P. et C. Manlii¹ cum L. Iulio; plebes C. Sextilium M.
 3 Albinum L. Antistium dedit. Manliis, quod genere plebeios, gratia Iulium anteibant, Volsci, provincia sine sorte, sine comparatione extra ordinem data; cuius et ipsos postmodo et patres qui dederant
 4 paenituit. Inexplorato pabulatum cohortes misere; quibus velut circumventis, cum id falso nuntiatum

¹ Manlii I².I²; manli MFETL: manlius OE: mallius U: manlio (manlio cum over erasure in A¹) PA¹: manlio n̄is H: mallii D³ (over erasure).

¹ According to Festus (p. 363) the offering was a golden crown weighing 2½ lbs.

other towns which were under the sway of the B.C. 380 Praenestini. Against these the Romans directed their campaign, and having taken them, with no great exertion, one after the other, marched to Velitrae and stormed that place also. Coming then to Praeneste, the fountain-head of the war, they got possession of it not by force but through capitulation.
 Titus Quinctius had gained one pitched battle,
 captured two camps, taken nine towns by assault, and received the surrender of Praeneste. He returned to Rome bringing with him from Praeneste the image of Jupiter Imperator. This he bore in triumph to the Capitol, where he dedicated it, between the shrine of Jupiter and that of Minerva.
 Below it he placed a tablet, in commemoration of his deeds, with an inscription to the following effect :
 " Jupiter and all the gods granted Titus Quinctius
 the dictator that he should take nine towns." ¹
 On the twentieth day after his appointment he resigned the dictatorship.

XXX. In the ensuing election of military tribunes B.C. 379 with consular powers, patricians and plebeians came off alike. Of the patricians Publius and Gaius Manlius were successful, along with Lucius Julius ; the plebs returned Gaius Sextilius, Marcus Albinus, and Lucius Antistius. The Manlii were superior in birth to their plebeian colleagues, and in popularity to Julius.
 To them, therefore, by special enactment, without reference to the lot or to mutual agreement, was given the command against the Volsci—an honour which they rued in the upshot, as did also the senators who had conferred it. Without reconnoitring they sent some troops to forage, and believing them to be cut off, for they had received a false

A.U.C.
375

esset, dum praesidio ut essent citati feruntur, ne auctore quidem adservato qui eos hostis Latinus pro milite Romano frustratus erat, ipsi in insidias praecipitavere. Ibi dum iniquo loco sola virtute militum restantes caeduntur caeduntque, castra interim Romana iacentia in campo ab altera parte hostes invaserunt. Ab ducibus utrobique proditae temeritate atque inscitia res; quidquid superfuit fortunae populi Romani, id militum etiam sine rectore stabilis virtus tutata est. Quae ubi Romam sunt relata, primum dictatorem dici placebat; deinde, postquam quietae res ex Volscis adferebantur et apparuit nescire eos victoria et tempore uti, revocati etiam inde exercitus ac duces, otiumque inde, quantum a Volscis, fuit; id¹ modo extremo anno tumultuatum quod Praenestini concitatis Latinorum populis rebellarunt.

9 Eodem anno Setiam² ipsis querentibus penuriam hominum novi coloni adscripti. Rebusque haud prosperis bello domestica quies, quam tribunorum militum ex plebe gratia maiestasque inter suos obtinuit, solacium fuit.

A.U.C.
376

XXXI. Insequentis anni principia statim seditione ingenti arsere tribunis militum consulari potestate Sp. Furio Q. Servilio iterum L.³ Menenio tertium report that such was the case, they hastened to their assistance, without so much as securing the author of the story—a Latin enemy who had deceived them in the guise of a Roman soldier,—and plunged into an ambuscade. While they were making a stand there on unfavourable ground, by the sheer courage of the men, who were selling their lives dearly, the Roman camp which lay in the plain was attacked by the enemy on the opposite side. In both places victory was thrown away by the rashness and ignorance of the generals. Whatever was left of the good fortune of the Roman People was saved by the pluck of the soldiers, which continued steadfast even when it lacked guidance. On the announcement of these events at Rome, it was at first resolved to appoint a dictator ; but later, when word came that things were quiet in the Volscian country, and it appeared that the enemy knew not how to use his victory and opportunity, even the armies and commanders which were there were withdrawn, and thereafter there was no trouble as far as the Volsci were concerned ; the only disturbance—towards the close of the year—was a mutiny of the Praenestini, who had stirred the peoples of Latium to revolt.

¹ fuit; id 5: fuisset id Ω: fuit seti id H (setiae Harant).

² anno Setiam Sigonius: annos etiam MPT: anno etiam Ω.

³ L. Alschevski: lucinio MF: licinio Ω. (cf. chap. xxvii. § 2).

That same year new colonists were enrolled for Setia, whose inhabitants themselves were complaining of their lack of men. For the ill success of the war there was consolation in the tranquillity at home, which was due to the influence of the plebeian military tribunes and the honour in which their order held them.

XXXI. The following year started off in a blaze of party strife. The military tribunes with consular powers were Spurius Furius, Quintus Servilius (for

A.U.C.
376

2 P. Cloelio M. Horatio L. Geganio. Erat autem et materia et causa seditionis aes alienum ; cuius noscendi gratia Sp. Servilius Priscus Q. Cloelius Siculus censores facti, ne rem agerent bello impediti sunt ;
 3 namque trepidi nuntii primo, fuga deinde ex agris legiones Volscorum ingressas fines popularique pas-4 sim Romanum agrum attulere. In qua trepidatione tantum afuit ut civilia certamina terror externus cohiberet, ut contra eo violentior potestas tribunicia impediendo dilectu esset, donec condiciones impositae patribus, ne quis, quoad bellatum esset, tri-5 butum daret aut ius de pecunia credita diceret. Eo laxamento plebi sumpto mora dilectui non est facta.
 Legionibus novis scriptis placuit duos exercitus in agrum Volscum legionibus divisus duci. Sp. Furius
 M. Horatius dextrorsus in¹ maritimam oram atque Antium, Q. Servilius et L. Geganius² laeva ad montes
 6 et Ecetram³ pergunt. Neutra parte hostis obvius fuit ; populatio itaque non illi vagae similis, quam Volscus latrocinii more, discordiae hostium fretus et virtutem metuens, per trepidationem raptim fecerat,
 sed ab iusto exercitu iusta ira facta, spatio quoque 7 temporis gravior. Quippe a Volscis timentibus ne interim exercitus ab Roma exiret incursiones in ex-

¹ dextrorsus in Madvig: dextrorsus Ω .

² L. Geganius ζ (cf. § 1) : M. Geganius Ω .

³ et ecetram Madvig: et cetram H: et etram B: ecetram Ω : ecetra E?L (monte se cetra).

the second time), Lucius Menenius (for the third), B.C. 378 Publius Cloelius, Marcus Horatius, and Lucius Geganus. Now the subject and reason of the strife was debt. But when Spurius Servilius Priscus and Quintus Cloelius Siculus had been made censors in order that they might investigate the situation, they were prevented from doing so by a war; for first frightened messengers, and then the country-folk fleeing from the fields, brought word that the Volscian legions had crossed the border, and were everywhere devastating Roman territory. Yet with all this alarm, the danger from abroad was so far from restraining dissensions at home, that on the contrary the tribunes but acted with the greater violence, in exerting their powers to block the levy; until the senate submitted to their terms, and agreed that till the war was finished no one should pay a war-tax or give judgment in a case of debt. The plebs, on obtaining this relief, ceased to obstruct the levy. When the new legions had been enrolled, it was resolved to divide them and form two armies to invade the country of the Volsci. Spurius Furius and Marcus Horatius marched to the right, towards Antium and the coast; Quintus Servilius and Lucius Geganus to the left, in the direction of Ecetra and the mountains. In neither region did they find the enemy. They accordingly laid waste the country, not in the desultory fashion of the Volsci, who like bandits, trusting in the discord of their foes but fearing their courage, had made a hasty foray in fear and trembling,—but with a regular army, justly provoked, and the more destructive in that they took more time. In fact, the Volsci had confined their pillaging to the borders, because of their fear lest an

A.U.C.
376

trema finium factae erant; Romano contra etiam in hostico morandi causa erat, ut hostem ad certamen 8 eliceret. Itaque omnibus passim tectis agrorum vicisque etiam quibusdam exustis, non arbore frugifera, non satis in spem frugum relictis, omni quae extra moenia fuit hominum pecudumque praeda abacta Romam utrimque exercitus reducti.

A.U.C.
377

XXXII. Parvo intervallo ad respirandum debitoribus dato postquam quietae res ab hostibus erant, celebrari de integro iuris dictio, et tantum abesse spes veteris levandi feneratoris, ut tributo novum fenus contraheretur in murum a censoribus locatum saxo
2 quadrato faciundum. Cui succumbere oneri coacta plebes, quia quem dilectum impedirent non habebant
3 tribuni plebis. Tribunos etiam militares patricios omnes coacta principum opibus fecit: L. Aemilium P. Valerium quartum C. Veturium Ser.
4 Sulpicium L. et C. Quinctios Cincinnatos. Iisdem opibus obtinere, ut adversus Latinos Volscosque, qui coniunctis legionibus ad Satricum castra habebant, nullo impediante omnibus iunioribus sacramento
5 adactis tres exercitus scriberent: unum ad praesidium urbis: alterum, qui, si qui alibi motus exstitisset, ad subita belli mitti posset: tertium longe validissimum P. Valerius et L. Aemilius ad
6 Satricum duxere. Ubi cum aciem instructam hosti-

¹ The reference is probably to a section of the city wall, damaged in the Gallic war.

army might come out from Rome while they were B.C. 378 at it; the Romans, on the contrary, were partly actuated, in remaining on hostile ground, by the desire of luring the enemy into a battle. So they burned all the farm-houses everywhere, and even certain villages, and leaving not a single fruit-tree nor the standing corn with its hope of harvest, they carried off as booty all the men and beasts outside the towns, and led both armies back to Rome.

XXXII. The debtors had been given a little time B.C. 377 for breathing, but no sooner did hostilities cease than the courts began once more to be alive with prosecutions, and not only was there no prospect of obtaining relief from the old debts, but a tax was levied to build a wall of hewn stone,¹ which the censors had contracted for, and new debts were incurred. To this burden the plebs were forced to submit, in the absence of any levy which their tribunes could obstruct. The nobles even possessed sufficient influence to oblige the plebs to elect all patricians to the military tribunate; these were Lucius Aemilius, Publius Valerius (for the fourth time), Gaius Veturius, Servius Sulpicius, Lucius and Gaius Quinctius Cincinnatus. The same influence enabled them to carry through their plans against the Latins and the Volsci, who had united their forces and were encamped near Satricum. No one objected when the men of military age were all compelled to take the oath, and three armies were enrolled: one was intended to defend the City;
another was for use in sudden expeditions, if a revolt should break out anywhere; a third—much the strongest—marched to Satricum, under Publius Valerius and Lucius Aemilius. There they found the

A.U.C.
377

- um loco aequo invenissent, extemplo pugnatum; et ut nondum satis claram¹ victoriam, sic prosperae spei pugnam imber ingentibus procellis fusus diremit.
- 7 Postero die iterata pugna; et aliquandiu aequa virtute fortunaque Latinae maxime legiones, longa societate militiam Romanam edoctae, restabant.
- 8 Sed eques immissus ordines turbavit, turbatis signa peditum inlata, quantumque Romana se invexit acies, tantum hostes gradu demoti; et, ut semel inclinavit pugna, iam intolerabilis Romana vis erat.
- 9 Fusi hostes cum Satricum, quod duo milia inde aberat, non castra peterent, ab equite maxime
- 10 caesi; castra capta direptaque. Ab Satrico nocte quae proelio proxima fuit fugae simili agmine petunt Antium; et cum Romanus exercitus prope vestigiis sequeretur, plus tamen timor quam ira celeritatis
- 11 habuit. Prius itaque moenia intravere hostes quam Romanus extrema agminis carpere aut morari posset. Inde aliquot dies vastando agro absumpti nec Romanis satis instructis apparatu bellico ad moenia adgredienda nec illis ad subeundum pugnae casum.

XXXIII. Seditio tum inter Antiates Latinosque coorta, cum Antiates victi malis subactique bello in quo et nati erant et consenuerant deditionem spectarent,² Latinos ex diutina pace nova defectio recentibus adhuc animis ferociore ad perseverandum in enemy drawn up in a strong position, and at once B.C. 377 attacked them ; and though victory was not yet assured, yet the battle was in a hopeful state, when great gusts of wind brought on a heavy downpour of rain and interrupted it. Next day the combat was renewed, and for some little time the enemy—particularly the Latin legions, schooled in Roman discipline by their long alliance—resisted with equal courage and success. But the cavalry were sent against them and threw their ranks into confusion, and before they could recover, the infantry were upon them ; in proportion as the Roman line advanced, was the enemy forced out of his position ; and when once the tide of battle turned, there was no stopping the onrush of the Romans. The routed enemy made for Satricum, two miles away, instead of their camp, and suffered great slaughter, especially at the hands of the cavalry. Their camp was taken and sacked. The night after the battle they fled rather than marched towards Antium ; and though the Roman army followed hard after, fear proved swifter than wrath. So the enemy got within the walls before the Romans could harass or delay their rear. A few days were then consumed in ravaging the land, since the Romans had not enough equipment to attack the walls, nor the enemy to risk a battle.

¹ claram Ω (cf. Walters and Conway, Gloss Quart., XII. (1918) p. 4): certam Madvig.

² spectarent ζ: exsp(or exp-)ectarent Ω.

¹ These words are really applicable to the Volsci in general, but not to the Antiates in particular. In § 4 the word Volscos is used as though equivalent to Antiates.

XXXIII. A quarrel now broke out between the Antiates and the Latins. The men of Antium, overwhelmed by their misfortunes and worn out by a war which had lasted from their birth to their old age,¹ were minded to capitulate : the Latins had but just revolted after a long peace ; their spirits were still fresh ; and they meant to continue boldly with bello faceret. Finis certaminis fuit postquam utrisque apparuit nihil per alteros stare quo minus 3 incepta persequerentur. Latini profecti ab societate¹ pacis, ut rebantur, inhonestae sese vindicaverunt, Antiates incommotis arbitris salutarium consiliorum remotis urbem agrosque Romanis dedunt. Ira et rabies Latinorum, quia nec Romanos bello laedere nec Volscos in armis retinere potuerant, eo erupit ut Satricum urbem, quae receptaculum primum eis adversae pugnae fuerat, igni concremarent; nec aliud tectum eius superfuit urbis, cum faces pariter sacris profanisque inicerent, quam

A.U.C.
377

 5 matris Matutae templum; inde eos nec sua religio nec verecundia deum arcuisse dicitur sed vox horrenda edita templo cum tristibus minis, ni nefandos
 6 ignes procul delubris amovissent. Incensos ea rabie impetus Tusculum tulit ob iram, quod deserto communi concilio Latinorum non in societatem modo Romanam sed etiam in civitatem se dedissent.
 7 Patentibus portis cum improvise incidissent, primo clamore oppidum praeter arcem captum est. In arcem oppidani refugere cum coniugibus ac liberis nuntiosque Romam, qui certiore de suo casu senatum facerent, misere. Haud segnius quam fide
 8 populi Romani dignum fuit exercitus Tusculum ductus; L. Quinctius et Ser. Sulpicius tribuni

¹ ab societate *D*¹ or *D*²: ad societate D: ad societatem L: a societate Ω.

¹ An ancient Italian deity worshipped by matrons and having to do with birth, and perhaps with the dawn. She had a temple in Rome and in Praeneste, and appears to have been the principal god of Satricum.

the war. The dispute came to an end as soon as B.C. 377 each party saw that the other could not prevent it in any way from carrying out its policy. The Latins departed, and freed themselves from all share in what they considered a degrading peace; the Antiates, being rid of inconvenient witnesses to their salutary measures, surrendered their city and lands to the Romans. The frenzied wrath of the Latins sought relief—since they could neither do the Romans any injury in war nor retain the Volsci under arms—in burning Satricum, the town which had been their first place of refuge after their defeat. They applied the torch without discrimination both to sacred and to secular buildings, and not one escaped destruction, except the temple of Mater Matuta;¹ from this they were kept away, according to the story, neither by their own scruples, nor by their reverence for the gods, but by an awe-inspiring voice that issued from the temple and threatened dire retribution if they did not remove those impious fires to a distance from the sacred walls. Crazed and infuriated, a sudden impulse carried them to Tusculum. They were angry that the Tusculans had deserted the common council of the Latins and had yielded themselves to be not only allies but citizens of Rome. The gates were open, for their attack was unexpected, and the first shout had not died away when the town was taken, all except the citadel. To this the townsfolk fled for safety, with their wives and children, and sent off messengers to Rome to let the senate know of their predicament. With a promptness worthy of the honour of the Roman People, an army marched to Tusculum, commanded by the military tribunes Lucius Quinctius

A.U.C.
377

- 9 militum duxere. Clausas portas Tusculi Latinosque simul obsidentium atque obsessorum animo hinc moenia¹ tueri vident, illinc arcem oppugnare, ter-
 10 rere una ac pavere. Adventus Romanorum mutaverat utriusque partis animos: Tusculanos ex ingenti metu in summam alacritatem, Latinos ex prope certa fiducia mox capiendae arcis, quoniam oppido poterentur, in exiguam de se ipsis spem verterat.
 11 Tollitur ex arce clamor ab Tusculanis; excipit² aliquanto maior ab exercitu Romano. Utrunque urgentur Latini; nec impetus Tusculanorum decurrentium ex superiore loco sustinent nec Romanos subeuntes moenia molientesque obices portarum 12 arcere possunt. Scalas prius moenia capta; inde effracta claustra portarum; et cum anceps hostis et a fronte et a tergo urgeret nec ad pugnam ulla vis nec ad fugam loci quicquam superesset, in medio caesi ad unum omnes. Reciperato ab hostibus Tusculo exercitus Romanus est reductus.

XXXIV. Quanto magis prosperis eo anno bellis tranquilla omnia foris erant, tantum³ in urbe vis patrum in dies miseriaeque plebis crescebant, cum eo ipso, quod necesse erat solvi, facultas solvendi
 2 impediretur. Itaque cum iam ex re nihil dari posset, fama et corpore iudicati atque addicti cre-

¹ moenia ς : moenia Tusculi Ω .

² excipit Alchevski: excipitur Ω .

³ tantum Madrig (cf. v. x. 5): tanto (wanting in O) Ω .

and Servius Sulpicius. They found the gates of B.C. 377 Tusculum closed and the Latins at once besiegers and besieged; on the one hand they were defending the walls of the town, on the other assailing the fortress, and they experienced themselves the same terror they inspired. The arrival of the Romans produced a change in the spirits of both sides: the Tusculans were roused from the depths of despair to the greatest cheerfulness; the Latins, who had felt almost certain that since the town was theirs they would soon possess the citadel, were reduced almost to despair of their own lives. The Tusculans in the citadel gave a cheer and were answered by one much louder from the Roman army. On both sides the Latins were hard pressed: they could neither resist the charges of the townsmen, as they rushed down from above, nor drive back the Romans, who were coming up under the walls and forcing the bars of the gates. The walls were first scaled and captured; then the fastenings of the gates were burst. The Latins were caught between two enemies, who assailed them hotly in front and rear; they had no strength to fight and no room to escape, and were slain where they stood, to the very last man.
 Having recovered Tusculum from its enemies, the army returned to Rome.

XXXIV. But in proportion as the successful wars of that year had everywhere secured tranquillity abroad, in the City the violence of the patricians and the sufferings of the plebs were increasing from one day to another, since the very fact that payment was compulsory made it more difficult to pay. And so, now that a man could make no compensation
 with his property, his reputation and his person

A.U.C.
377

3 ditoribus satisfaciebant, poenaeque in vicem fidei cesserat. Adeo ergo obnoxios summiserant animos non infimi solum sed principes etiam plebis, ut non modo ad tribunatum militum inter patricos pe-4 tendum, quod tanta vi ut liceret tetenderant, sed ne ad plebeios quidem magistratus capessendos peten-dosque ulli viro acri experientique animus esset, possessionemque honoris usurpati modo a plebe
 per paucos annos reciperasse in perpetuum patres viderentur.

5 Ne id nimis laetum parti alteri esset, parva, ut plerumque solet, rem ingentem moliundi causa intervenit. M. Fabi Ambusti, potentis viri cum inter sui corporis homines tum etiam ad plebem, quod haudquaquam inter id genus contemptor eius habebatur, filiae duae nuptae, Ser. Sulpicio maior, minor C. Licinio Stoloni erat, illustri quidem viro tamen plebeio; eaque ipsa adfinitas haud spre-6 gratiam Fabio ad volgum quaesierat. Forte ita incidit ut in Ser. Sulpici tribuni militum domo sorores Fabiae cum inter se, ut fit, sermonibus tempus tererent, lictor Sulpici, cum is de foro se domum reciperet, forem, ut mos est, virga percuteret. Cum ad id moris eius insueta expavisset minor Fabia, risui sorori fuit miranti ignorare id
 7 sororem; ceterum is risus stimulos parvis mobili

¹ Father of the three envoys to the Gauls whose story is told at v. xxxv. 36.

were made over and assigned to his creditor by way B.C. 377 of satisfaction, and punishment had come to take the place of payment. So abject indeed was the surrender not only of the lowest of the plebs but even of their leaders, that, far from contending with patricians for the military tribuneship—a privilege for which they had striven with such energy—there was not a man of them of sufficient force and enterprise to seek or to administer the plebeian magistracies. The patricians seemed therefore to have regained possession in perpetuity of an office which the plebeians had merely assumed for some few years.

That this state of affairs might not inspire excessive joy in the patricians, a trivial cause—as often happens—set on foot a mighty change. Marcus Fabius Ambustus¹ was very influential, not only amongst his fellows, but with the plebs as well, for the members of that class felt that he was far from looking down upon it. This man had married his two daughters, the elder to Servius Sulpicius, the younger to Gaius Licinius Stolo, a man of mark, albeit a plebeian; and the very fact that he had not rejected such an alliance had won regard for Fabius with the common people. It fell out that the sisters Fabia were together in the house of Servius Sulpicius, then a consular tribune, and were whiling away the time in talk, as women will, when a lictor of Sulpicius, who was returning from the Forum, rapped on the door, in the usual manner, with his rod. At this the younger Fabia, being unused to the custom, went white, which made the elder laugh with surprise at her sister's ignorance. But that laugh rankled in the other's mind, for a woman's feelings

A.U.C.
377

rebus animo muliebri subdidit. Frequentia quoque prosequentium rogantiumque num quid vellet credo fortunatum matrimonium ei sororis visum suique
 ipsam, malo arbitrio quo a proximis quisque mi-8 nime anteiri volt, paenituisse. Confusam eam ex recenti morsu animi cum pater forte vidisset, percontatus "Satin salvae?"¹ avertentem causam do-
 loris, quippe nec satis piam adversus sororem nec 9 admodum in virum honorificam, elicuit comiter sciscitando ut fateretur eam esse causam doloris, quod iuncta impari esset, nupta in domo quam nec 10 honos nec gratia intrare posset. Consolans inde filiam Ambustus bonum animum habere iussit:
 eosdem propediem domi visuram honores quos 11 apud sororem videat. Inde consilia inire cum genero coepit adhibito L. Sextio, strenuo adulescente et cuius spei nihil praeter genus patricium
 deesset.

A.U.C.
379-383

XXXV. Occasio videbatur rerum novandarum propter ingentem vim aeris alieni, cuius levamen mali plebes nisi suis in summo imperio locatis nullum speraret: accingendum ad eam cogitatio-2 nem esse; conando agendoque iam eo gradum fecisse plebeios unde, si porro adnitantur, pervenire ad summa et patribus aequari tam honore 3 quam virtute possent. In praesentia tribunos plebis fieri placuit, quo in magistratu sibimet ipsi viam ad
 4 ceteros honores aperirent. Creatique tribuni C.

¹ Satin salvae U: satin salve Ω.

¹ Livy has omitted the consuls for A.U.C. 378 = B.C. 376.

are influenced by trifles. I suppose, too, that the B.C. 377 crowd of people who attended the tribune and took a ceremonious leave of him made her look upon her sister's marriage as a fortunate one and regret her own, in that ill-judging spirit which makes us all so very loath to be outdone by our nearest friends.
She was still suffering from the smart of wounded pride, when her father, happening to see her, asked if anything was wrong. She would fain have concealed the reason of her grief, which was too little consistent with sisterly affection and did no great honour to her husband; but he brought her by tender inquiries to confess that she was unhappy in being mated to one beneath her, having married into a house where neither dignities nor influence could enter. Ambustus then comforted his daughter and bade her be of good cheer: she would see ere long in her own home the same state she beheld at her sister's. From that moment he began to make plans with his son-in-law, taking into their counsels also Lucius Sextius, a strenuous youth, whose aspirations were thwarted only by his lack of patrician blood.

XXXV. An opportunity for innovation was pre- B.C. 375 sented by the enormous load of debt, which the 371¹
plebs could have no hope of lightening but by placing their representatives in the highest offices.
They therefore argued that they must gird themselves to think of this: with toil and effort the plebeians had already advanced so far that it was in their power, if they continued to exert themselves, to reach the highest ground, and to equal the patricians in honours as well as in worth. For the present it was resolved that Gaius Licinius and

A.U.C.
379-383

- Licinius et L. Sextius promulgavere leges omnes adversus opes patriciorum et pro commodis plebis, unam de aere alieno, ut deducto eo de capite quod usuris pernumeratum esset, id quod superesset tri-
 5 ennio aequis pensionibus ¹ persolveretur; alteram de modo ² agrorum, ne quis plus quingenta iugera agri possideret; tertiam ne tribunorum militum comitia fierent consulumque utique alter ex plebe crearetur; cuncta ingentia et quae sine certamine maximo obtineri non possent.
- 6 Omnium igitur simul rerum, quarum immodica cupido inter mortales est, agri pecuniae honorum, discrimine proposito, conterriti patres cum trepidassent publicis privatisque consiliis, nullo remedio alio praeter expertam multis iam ante certaminibus intercessionem invento collegas adversus tribunicias
 7 rogationes comparaverunt. Qui ubi tribus ad suffragium ineundum citari a Licinio Sextioque viderunt, stipati patrum praesidiis nec recitari rogationes nec sollemne quicquam aliud ad sciscendum plebi fieri
 8 passi sunt. Iamque frustra saepe concilio advocato cum pro antiquatis rogationes essent: "Bene habet" inquit Sextius; "quando quidem tantum interces-

¹ pensionibus Quiacius (cf. VII. xxvii. 3, xxx. xxxvii. 5): pertionibus T: portionibus Ω.

² modo D²A²: domo Ω: dono UA².

¹ This law appears to have had reference only to the public lands. The reduction of excessive holdings was intended to make the land accommodate a large number of poorer tenants. In the year 357 B.C. Licinius was punished for transgressing his own law (VII. xvi. 9).

Lucius Sextius should be elected tribunes of the plebs, a magistracy in which they might open for themselves a way to the other distinctions. Once elected, they proposed only such measures as abated the influence of the patricians, while forwarding the interests of the plebs. One of these had to do with debt, providing that what had been paid as interest should be deducted from the original sum, and the remainder discharged in three annual instalments of equal size. A second set a limit on lands, prohibiting anyone from holding more than five hundred iugera.¹ A third did away with the election of military tribunes, and prescribed that of the consuls one, at any rate, should be chosen from the plebs. These were all matters of great moment, and it would not be possible to carry them without a tremendous struggle.

Now when all the things that men immoderately covet, lands, money, and promotion, were jeopardized at once, the patricians became thoroughly alarmed; and failing, after frightened conference in public and private gatherings, to devise any other remedy than that which they had already tried before in many struggles, provided themselves with friends amongst the colleagues of the tribunes, to oppose their measures. These men, seeing Licinius and Sextius summon the tribes to vote, came up in the midst of a body-guard of patricians, and refused to permit the bills to be recited or anything else to be done that was usual in passing a resolution of the plebs. And now the assembly had been summoned repeatedly without avail, and the rogations were as though they had been voted down, when Sextius cried out, "So be it! Since it is your pleasure that

B.C.
375-371

A.U.C.
379-383

sionem pollere placet, isto ipso telo tutabimur 9 plebem. Agitedum, comitia indicite, patres, tribunis militum creandis; faxo ne quid iuvet¹ vox
ista 'veto,' qua nunc concinentes collegas nostros 10 tam laeti auditis." Haud inritae cecidere minae:
comitia praeter aedilium tribunorumque plebi nulla sunt habita. Licinius Sextiusque tribuni plebis refecti nullos curules magistratus creari passi sunt;
eaeque solitudo magistratuum et plebe reficiente
duos tribunos et iis comitia tribunorum militum tollentibus per quinquennium urbem tenuit.

A.U.C.
384-385

XXXVI. Alia bella opportune quievere: Veliterni coloni gestientes otio, quod nullus exercitus Romanus esset, et agrum Romanum aliquotiens incursavere et 2 Tusculum oppugnare adorti sunt; eaeque res Tusculanis, veteribus sociis, novis civibus, opem orantibus verecundia maxime non patres modo sed etiam ple-3 bem movit. Remittentibus tribunis plebis comitia per interregem sunt habita, creatique tribuni militum
L. Furius A. Manlius Ser. Sulpicius Ser. Cornelius
P.² et C. Valerii. Haudquaquam tam oboedientem 4 in dilectu quam in comitiis plebem habuere; ingen-tique contentione exercitu scripto profecti non ab
Tusculo modo summovere hostem sed intra suamet
5 ipsum moenia compulere, obsidebanturque haud paulo vi maiore Velitrae quam Tusculum obsessum

¹ ne quid iuvet. Häggyström: ne qd iubet U: ne (ni? M)
iuvet (or iuet or iubet) Ω.

² P. Sigonius (U.I.L. i², p. 129): A. Ω: omitted by U: O is wanting at this point.

the intercession should be so powerful, we will use that very weapon for the protection of the plebs. B.C.
375-371 Come now, senators, and proclaim an assembly for the choice of military tribunes; I warrant you shall have no joy of that word reto, which you now hear with such satisfaction from the chorus of our colleagues." His threats were no idle ones: except for the aediles and tribunes of the plebs, there was not an election held. Licinius and Sextius were chosen again, and suffered no curule magistrates to be elected; and this dearth of magistrates continued in the City for five years, while the plebs continued to reelect the two men tribunes, and they to prevent the election of military tribunes.

XXXVI. There was fortunately a respite from other wars, but the colonists of Velitrae, growing insolent in time of peace, because they knew that the Romans had no army, not only made several incursions into Roman territory, but went so far as to lay siege to Tusculum. This circumstance affected not only the senators but even the plebeians; that the Tusculans, who had long been their friends and were now their fellow citizens, should be imploring aid filled them with shame. The tribunes of the plebs relaxing their opposition, elections were held by an interrex, which resulted in the choice of the following military tribunes: Lucius Furius, Aulus Manlius, Servius Sulpicius, Servius Cornelius, and Publius and Gaius Valerius. They found the plebs much less submissive to the levy than they had been to the election; but by strenuous efforts they enrolled an army, and, marching out, not only drove the enemy away from Tusculum, but even shut him up within his own walls, and Velitrae was besieged with far

B.C.
370-369

- fuerat. Nec tamen ab eis a quibus obsideri coeptae 6 erant expugnari potuere; ante novi creati sunt tri-buni militum Q. Servilius C. Veturius A. et M.
 Cornelii Q. Quinctius M. Fabius. Nihil ne ab his quidem tribunis ad Velitras memorabile factum.
 7 In maiore discrimine domi res vertebantur. Nam praeter Sextium Liciniumque latores legum, iam
 octavum tribunos plebis refectos, Fabius quoque tribunus militum, Stolonis socer, quarum legum
 auctor fuerat, earum suasorem se haud dubium fere-8 bat; et cum octo ex collegio tribunorum plebi primo intercessores legum fuissent, quinque soli erant, et,
 ut ferme solent qui a suis desciscunt, capti et stu-
 pentes animi vocibus alienis id modo quod domi
 praeceptum erat intercessioni suae praetendebant:
 9 Velitris in exercitu plebis magnam partem abesse;
 in adventum militum comitia differri debere, ut
 universa plebes de suis commodis suffragium ferret.
 10 Sextius Liciniusque cum parte collegarum et uno ex
 tribunis militum Fabio, artifices iam tot annorum usu tractandi animos plebis, primores patrum productos interrogando de singulis quae ferebantur ad popu-11 lum, fatigabant: auderentne postulare ut, cum bina
 iugera agri plebi dividerentur, ipsis plus quingenta

more vigour than Tusculum had been. Yet those who had begun the siege were not able to conclude it before the election of new military tribunes. The candidates chosen were Quintus Servilius, Gaius Veturius, Aulus and Marcus Cornelius, Quintus Quinctius, and Marcus Fabius. Even these tribunes accomplished nothing memorable at Velitrae.

At home the situation was more dangerous. For besides Sextius and Licinius, who had proposed the laws and were now for the eighth time re-elected tribunes of the plebs, the military tribune Fabius, Stolo's father-in-law, was openly advocating the adoption of the measures he had himself suggested. And whereas there had been at first eight members of the college of plebeian tribunes who opposed the bills, there were now but five; and these, puzzled and confounded, as is apt to be the case with men who forsake their party, were no more than mouth-pieces, repeating in justification of their vetoes only what they had been privately schooled to say, to wit, that a majority of the plebeians were absent at Velitrae with the army; and that the assemblies ought to be put off until the return of the soldiers, so that the entire body of the plebs might vote on matters that concerned them. Sextius and Licinius, with some of their colleagues and one of the military tribunes, Fabius, being experts now—after so many years of practice—in the art of playing on the passions of the commons, would bring the leading senators forward and ply them with questions about each of the measures they were laying before the people: Had they the hardihood to demand that, when land was being assigned to the plebs in parcels of two iugera, they themselves should be authorized to hold more

A.U.C.
384-385

iugera habere liceret, ut singuli prope trecentorum civium possiderent agros, plebeio homini vix ad tectum necessarium aut locum sepulturae suus pateret 12 ager? An placeret fenore circumventam plebem, potius quam sortem¹ solvat, corpus in nervum ac supplicia dare, et gregatim cottidie de foro addictos duci et repleri vinctis nobiles domus, et ubicumque patricius habitet, ibi carcerem privatum esse?

XXXVII. Haec indigna miserandaque auditu cum apud timentes sibimet ipsos maiore audientium indig-
2 natione quam sua increpuissent, atqui nec agros occupandi modum nec fenore trucidandi plebem alium patribus unquam fore, adfirmabant, nisi alterum ex plebe consulem, custodem suae libertatis, fecissent.²
3 Contemni iam tribunos plebis, quippe quae potestas
4 iam suam ipsa³ vim frangat intercedendo. Non posse aequo iure agi ubi imperium penes illos, penes se auxilium tantum sit; nisi imperio communicato nunquam plebem in parte pari rei publicae fore. Nec esse quod quisquam satis putet si plebeiorum ratio comitiis consularibus habeatur; nisi alterum consulem utique ex plebe fieri necesse sit, neminem
5 fore. An iam memoria exisse, cum tribunos militum idcirco potius quam consules creari placuisset, ut et

¹ potius quam sortem Conway: ni potius quam sortem creditum Ω (but U has sorte, and O's text is uncertain).

² libertatis fecissent Walters: libertatis plebi fecisset (fecissent M or M³) Ω .

³ ipsa A²₅: ipsam Ω .

¹ Imperium, which the tribunes of the plebs did not possess.

than five hundred iugera? Did they desire that single patricians should possess the allotments of almost three hundred citizens; and that the plebeian should have a farm scarce large enough to contain a shelter for his necessities or a place of burial? Or was it their wish that the plebs, undone with usury, should give up their bodies to imprisonment and torture, instead of paying the principal sums they owed? Did they mean every day to drag off gangs of condemned debtors from the Forum? to fill with prisoners the houses of the nobles? to make of every patrician's dwelling a private gaol?

XXXVII. The shame and pity of these conditions awoke more indignation in their hearers, who feared for their own safety, than the speakers had themselves felt in denouncing them. And yet the patricians—as they proceeded to assert—would never check their greed for land, nor cease murdering the plebs with usury, until the commons should elect one of the two consuls from their own number, to guard their liberties. Contempt, they argued, was now become the portion of the plebeian tribunes, for they used the veto to break down their own power. There could be no question of equal rights, where the other side commanded and they themselves could do nothing but protest. Until they shared in the authority,¹ the plebs would never have an equal footing in the state. And let no one think that it would be sufficient if plebeians were accepted as candidates at the consular elections: unless it were required that at least one consul must be chosen from the commons, none ever would be. Had they already forgotten, that although the election of tribunes of the soldiers rather than

B.C.
370—369

plebeiis pateret summus honos, quattuor et quadraginta annis neminem ex plebe tribunum militum
 6 creatum esse? Qui crederent duobus nunc¹ in locis sua voluntate impertituros plebi honorem, qui octona loca tribunis militum creandis occupare soliti sint, et ad consulatum viam fieri passuros, qui tribunatum
 7 saeptum tam diu habuerint? Lege obtinendum esse quod comitiis per gratiam nequeat, et seponendum extra certamen alterum consulatum, ad quem plebi sit aditus, quoniam in certamine relictus praemium
 8 semper potentioris futurus sit. Nec iam posse dici id quod antea iactare soliti sint, non esse in plebeiis idoneos viros ad curulis magistratus; numquid enim socordius aut segnius rem publicam administrari post² P. Licini Calvi tribunatum, qui primus ex plebe creatus sit, quam per eos annos gesta sit quibus praeter patricios nemo tribunus militum fuerit? Quin contra patricios aliquot damnatos
 9 post tribunatum, neminem plebeium. Quaestores quoque, sicut tribunos militum, paucis ante annis ex plebe coeptos creari nec ullius eorum populum Ro-
 10 manum paenituisse. Consulatum superesse plebeiis; eam esse arcem libertatis, id columnen. Si eo per-ventum sit, tum populum Romanum vere exactos ex urbe reges et stabilem libertatem suam existima-

¹ nunc Iac. Gronovius: ne (ne L?) Ω .

² post ς : potest post Ω : potens post H: potest D?LA: posse post A?.

¹ In 400 B.C. (v. xii. 9).

consuls had been resolved upon, expressly in order that the highest honour might be open even to plebeians, yet for four and forty years no commoner had been chosen to that office? How could they suppose, that with two places only now available, the patricians would of their own volition bestow the office on the plebs, when they had habitually claimed eight places in electing military tribunes? Would those men allow the consulship to be approached, who had blocked so long the road to the tribuneship? The law must make good for them what they could not gain by favour at the elections; one of the two consulships must be set apart for the undisputed use of the plebs, for if left in dispute it would always fall a prize to the more powerful. Neither could it any longer be maintained—as the nobles had been wont to assert—that among the plebeians were none who were suitable for curule magistracies. Had the public administration been a jot more indifferent or slipshod since the tribuneship of Publius Licinius Calvus, who was the first man elected from the plebs,¹ than it had been during those years in which none but patricians had been military tribunes? Nay, on the contrary, several patricians had been impeached after holding the tribuneship, but not one plebeian. Quaestors, too, like military tribunes, had begun a few years before to be elected from the commons, nor had the Roman People regretted it in a single case. The consulship remained for the commons to achieve; this was the citadel of liberty, this its pillar. If they attained to this, then would the Roman People hold that the kings had been really driven from the City, and their freedom

B.C.
370-369

A.U.C.
384-385

11 turum; quippe ex illa die in plebem ventura omnia quibus patricii excellant, imperium atque honorem, gloriam belli, genus, nobilitatem, magna ipsis fruenda, maiora liberis relinquenda.

12 Huius generis orationes ubi accipi videre, novam rogationem promulgant, ut pro duumviris sacris faciundis decemviri creentur ita ut pars ex plebe, pars ex patribus fiat; omniumque earum rogationum comitia in adventum eius exercitus differunt qui Velitras obsidebat.

A.U.C.
386

XXXVIII. Prius circumactus est annus quam a Velitris reducerentur legiones; ita suspensa de legibus res ad novos tribunos militum dilata; nam plebis tribunos eosdem, duos utique qui¹ legum latores erant, plebes reficiebat. Tribuni militum creati T. Quinctius Ser. Cornelius Ser. Sulpicius Sp. Ser-
3 vilius L. Papirius L. Veturius. Principio statim anni ad ultimam dimicationem de legibus ventum; et cum tribus vocarentur nec intercessio collegarum latoribus obstaret, trepidi patres ad duo ultima auxilia, summum imperium summumque ad civem decurrunt.
4 Dictatorem dici placet; dicitur M. Furius Camillus, qui magistrum equitum L. Aemilium cooptat. Legum quoque latores adversus tantum apparatus adver-

¹ qui 5: quia Ω: que A.

¹ The nobles were those who had held—or whose ancestors had held—curule chairs. Originally nobility had been confined to the patriciate, with which, indeed—since most patrician families could point to some office-holding ancestor,—it had been practically identical. The new nobility comprised plebeians as well as patricians, and owing to the tendency of the electorate to continue the same families in office, it became almost as exclusive a body as the old patriciate.

firmly based ; for the commons would thenceforward be partakers in all that made the patricians now surpass them,—authority and honour, martial renown, birth and nobility,¹—great things for themselves to enjoy, but even greater to bequeath to their children.

Perceiving that speeches of this sort were well received, they introduced a new measure, providing that in place of two men vested with superintendence of the sacred rites, a board of ten should be elected, with a proviso that half the number should be of the plebs, and half patricians ; the voting on all these bills they deferred until the return of the army which was besieging Velitrae.

XXXVIII. A year rolled round before the legions could be brought back from Velitrae ; consequently the question of the laws remained in abeyance and was put off until the coming in of the new military tribunes ; for as to the tribunes of the plebs, the commons chose the same men over again—the two, at any rate, who had brought in the bills. The military tribunes chosen were Titus Quinctius, Servius Cornelius, Servius Sulpicius, Spurius Servilius, Lucius Papirius, and Lucius Veturius. At the very outset of the year came a final struggle over the laws ; and when the tribes were summoned to vote, and the proposers of the measures would not yield to the vetoes of their colleagues, the frightened patricians were put to their two last shifts—the greatest office, and the greatest of the citizens. They voted to name a dictator, and appointed Marcus Furius Camillus, who chose Lucius Aemilius for his master of the horse. To meet these formidable preparations of their adversaries, the proposers

B.C.
370–369

B.C. 368

sariorum et ipsi causam plebis ingentibus animis armant concilioque plebis indicto tribus ad suffragium vocant.

- 5 Cum dictator, stipatus agmine patriciorum, plenus irae minarumque consedisset atque ageretur res solito primum certamine inter se tribunorum plebi ferentium legem intercedentiumque et, quanto iure potentior intercessio erat, tantum vinceretur favore legum ipsarum latorumque et “uti rogas” primae
- 6 tribus dicerent, tum Camillus “Quando quidem” inquit, “Quirites, iam vos tribunicia libido, non potestas regit, et intercessionem secessione quondam plebis partam vobis eadem vi facitis inritam qua peperistis, non rei publicae magis universae quam vestra causa dictator intercessioni adero eversumque
- 7 vestrum auxilium imperio tutabor. Itaque si C. Licinius et L. Sextius intercessioni collegarum cedunt, nihil patricium magistratum inseram concilio plebis; si adversus intercessionem tamquam captae civitati leges imponere tendent, vim tribuniciam a se ipsa dissolvi non patiar.”
- 8 Adversus ea cum contemptim tribuni plebis rem nihilo segnius peragerent, tum percitus ira Camillus lictores qui de medio plebem emoverent misit et addidit minas, si pergerent, sacramento omnes of the laws on their side armed the commons with tremendous enthusiasm for the cause, and proclaiming a council of the plebs, called up the tribes to vote. B.C. 368

Attended by a body of patricians, and breathing wrath and menaces, the dictator took his seat, and the affair began with the usual skirmish between the tribunes of the plebs, some of whom urged the passing of the law while others interposed their vetoes. But powerful as the veto was on the legal side, it was being overcome by the popularity of the bills themselves and their proposers, and the tribes which had been summoned first were voting "Ay," when Camillus addressed the people. "Quirites," he said, "since you are now swayed not by the authority of the tribunes but by their lawlessness, and are bringing to naught the right of protest—obtained through the secession of the plebs—with the same violence with which you won it; for your own sake no less than for the sake of the whole republic, I shall, as dictator, sustain the veto, and safeguard with my absolute authority your defence which you are overthrowing. If then Gaius Licinius and Lucius Sextius yield to the protest of their colleagues, I will in no way intrude a patrician magistracy upon a council of the plebs; but if, in defiance of the protest, they try to impose their terms, as though upon a conquered state, I will not permit the tribunician power to work its own undoing."

This warning the tribunes treated with contempt, and were proceeding with unabated energy to carry out their plans, when Camillus, in high dudgeon, sent his lictors to turn the commons out; and threatened, that if they continued in their course, he would

- iuniores adacturum exercitumque extemplo ex urbe 9 educturum. Terrorem ingentem incusserat plebi:
 ducibus plebis accendit magis certamine animos quam minuit. Sed re neutro inclinata magistratu se abdicavit, seu quia vitio creatus erat, ut scripsere quidam, seu quia tribuni plebis tulerunt ad plebem idque plebs scivit, ut, si M. Furius pro dictatore 10 quid egisset, quingentum milium ei multa esset; sed auspiciis magis quam novi exempli rogatione deterri-tum ut potius credam, cum ipsius viri facit ingenium, tum quod ei suffectus est extemplo P. Manlius dictator—quem quid creari attinebat ad id certamen quo 11 M. Furius victus esset?—et quod eundem M. Furium dictatorem insequens annus habuit, haud sine pudore certe fractum priore anno in se imperium repeti-12 turum; simul quod eo tempore quo promulgatum de multa eius traditur aut et huic rogationi, qua se in ordinem cogi videbat, obsistere potuit, aut ne illas 13 quidem propter quas et haec lata erat impedire; et quod quicquid¹ usque ad memoriam nostram tribu-niciis consularibusque certatum viribus est, dictaturae semper altius fastigium fuit.

XXXIX. Inter priorem dictaturam abdicatam novamque a Manlio imitam ab tribunis velut per inter-

¹ quod quicquid Rosslach (Berl. Phil. Woch., 1920, col. 704): quod Ω.

administer the oath to all of military age, and forth- B.C. 368 with lead the army out of the City.

The plebs were greatly dismayed; but the courage of their leaders was rather kindled than damped by his vehemence. Yet before the matter had been decided either way, Camillus resigned his office, whether because there had been a flaw in his election—as certain writers have held—or because the tribunes proposed to the plebs and the plebs decreed, that if Marcus Furius should take any action in the capacity of dictator, he should be fined five hundred thousand asses. But that the auspices, and not a law without a precedent, were responsible for his withdrawal, the very nature of the man inclines me to believe; also the fact that Publius Manlius was at once made dictator in his place—for what good would his appointment do, in a struggle in which Marcus Furius had been beaten? Besides, Marcus Furius himself was dictator again in the following year, and he would surely have been ashamed to resume an authority which had broken down in his own hands the year before. Moreover at the time when the proposal to fine him is said to have been made, either he had the power to resist this order—which deprived him, as he could see, of all authority,—or else he lacked the power to obstruct even those measures in defence of which this order had been proposed. Finally, whatever conflicts have occurred between tribunes and consuls, down to the times we can ourselves remember, the dictatorship has always towered above them.

XXXIX. In the interval between the abdication of the earlier dictator and the entrance upon his office of the new one, Manlius, the tribunes—as

A.U.C.
386

- regnum concilio plebis habito apparuit quae ex promulgatis plebi, quae latoribus gratiora essent.
- 2 Nam de fenore atque agro rogationes iuebant, de plebeio consule antiquabant; et perfecta utraque res esset, ni tribuni se in omnia simul consulere
- 3 plebem dixissent. P. Manlius deinde dictator rem in causam plebis inclinavit C. Licinio, qui tribunus militum fuerat, magistro equitum de plebe dicto.
- 4 Id aegre patres passos accipio; dictatorem propinqua cognatione Licini se apud patres excusare solitum, simul negantem magistri equitum maius quam tribuni consularis imperium esse.
- 5 Licinius Sextiusque, cum tribunorum plebi creandorum indicta comitia essent, ita se gerere ut negando iam sibi velle continuari honorem acerrime accenderent ad id quod dissimulando petebant ple-
- 6 bem: nonum se annum iam velut in acie ¹ adversus optimates maximo privatim periculo, nullo publice emolumento stare. Consenuisse iam secum et rogationes promulgatas et vim omnem tribuniciae potesta-
- 7 tis. Primo intercessione collegarum in leges suas pugnatum esse, deinde ablegatione iuventutis ad Veliternum bellum, postremo dictatorium fulmen in

¹ in acie *UD*³ Gronovius (1665): in aciem Ω .

¹ i. e. the consular tribunes counted for nothing, and the tribunes of the plebs could proceed without let or hindrance.

² Not the tribune of the plebs, but possibly his father. Livy perhaps included him among the consular tribunes for 378 B.C. (cf. chap. xxi. § 1; where the text is uncertain) or should have included him among those for the year 376 B.C., but has omitted the entire list (chap. xxxiv). Diod. xv. 57, gives Gaius Licinius as one of four consular tribunes for the year 378 B.C.

though there were an interregnum¹—held a council B.C. 368 of the plebs, and it became evident which of the measures proposed were more acceptable to the plebeians, and which to their introducers. For the tribes were on the point of passing the bills relating to interest and land, and of rejecting the one about the plebeian consul, and both policies would have been finally disposed of, if the tribunes had not said that they were putting all these questions to the plebs collectively. Then Publius Manlius, becoming dictator, gave the affair a turn in favour of the plebs by naming Gaius Licinius,² who had been military tribune and was a commoner, his master of the horse. I find that the patricians took offence at this, but that the dictator was wont to excuse himself to them by alleging his close relationship to Licinius, and asserting that a master of the horse possessed no greater authority than a consular tribune.

Licinius and Sextius, when an assembly had been proclaimed for the election of plebeian tribunes, so bore themselves that while professing an unwillingness to be re-elected, they furnished the plebs with the strongest incentives to give them what they pretended not to covet. They said it was now nine years that they had stood embattled, as it were, against the optimates, with the greatest danger to themselves and no advantage to the public. The measures they had proposed and the whole power of the tribunate had, like themselves, grown old and useless. First the intercession of their colleagues had been employed to attack their laws; then the young men had been banished to the seat of war at Velitrae; finally they had themselves been menaced

A.U.C.
386

- 8 se intentatum. Iam nec collegas nec bellum nec dictatorem obstare, quippe qui etiam omen plebeio consuli magistro¹ equitum ex plebe dicendo dederit :
 9 se ipsam plebe et commoda morari sua. Liberam urbem ac forum a creditoribus, liberos agros ab iniustis possessoribus extemplo, si velit, habere posse.
 10 Quae munera quando tandem satis grato animo aestimatos, si inter accipiendas de suis commodis rogationes spem honoris latoribus earum incidant? Non esse modestiae populi Romani id postulare ut ipse fenore levetur et in agrum iniuria possessum a potentibus inducatur, per quos ea consecutus sit senes tribunicios non sine honore tantum sed etiam
 11 sine spe honoris relinquat. Proinde ipsi primum statuerent apud animos quid vellent deinde comitiis tribuniciis declararent voluntatem. Si coniuncte² ferre ab se promulgatas rogationes vellent, esse quod eosdem reficerent tribunos plebis; perluros 12 enim quae promulgaverint; sin quod cuique privatim opus sit id modo accipi velint, opus esse nihil invidiosa continuatione honoris; nec se tribunatum nec illos ea quae promulgata sint habituros.

XL. Adversus tam obstinatham orationem tribunorum cum prae indignitate rerum stupor silentiumque

¹ magistro Ω : magistrum U Häggström.

² coniuncte (ur -tae) Ω : coniuxte HTDLA?: coniunctim ς D. akenborch.

with the thunderbolt of the dictatorship. At present B.C. 368 they were thwarted neither by their colleagues, nor by war, nor even by the dictator, for he had actually given them a presage of plebeian consuls by appointing a plebeian master of the horse: no, it was the plebs themselves who stood in the way of their own advancement. A City and a Forum rid of creditors, and lands delivered from unlawful occupation, were things they might enjoy at once, if they would.
 When, pray, did they expect to weigh these blessings and be duly grateful, if at the very moment of entertaining measures for their own advantage they cut off all hope of office from the men who introduced them? It was not like the reasonableness of the Roman People to ask to be relieved themselves of usury and settled on lands which the nobles had unjustly held, while leaving the men to whom they owed these advantages to grow old as tribunicians—not only without honours, but even without the hope of them. So let them first make up their minds what it was they wished; and then declare their wishes at the election of the tribunes.
 If they desired to enact together the measures which the tribunes had brought forward, there was some reason for re-electing them; for they would carry through what they had advocated; but if every man cared only for the adoption of such clauses as concerned him personally, there was no use in an invidious prolongation of their term; they would do without the tribuneship, and the people would do without the proposed reforms.

XL. On hearing the tribunes make this stubborn speech, though the other senators were dazed and dumbfounded by such outrageous arguments, they

A.U.C.
386

- 2 inde ceteros patrum defixisset, Ap. Claudius Crassus, nepos decemviri, dicitur odio magis iraque quam spe
ad dissuadendum processisse et locutus in hanc fere 3 sententiam esse: "Neque novum neque inopinatum mihi sit, Quirites, si, quod unum familiae nostrae semper obiectum est ab seditiosis tribunis, id nunc ego quoque audiam, Claudiae gentis¹ iam inde ab initio nihil antiquius in re publica patrum maiestate fuisse, semper plebis commodis adversatos esse.
4 Quorum alterum neque nego neque infitias eo, nos,
ex quo adsciti sumus simul in civitatem et patres,
enixe operam dedisse ut per nos aucta potius quam im-minuta maiestas earum gentium inter quas nos esse 5 voluistis dici vere posset: illud alterum pro me majoribusque meis contendere ausim, Quirites, nisi quae pro
universa re publica fiant ea plebi tamquam aliam incolenti urbem adversa quis putet, nihil nos neque privatos neque in magistratibus quod incommodum plebi esset scientes fecisse nec ullum factum dictum-ve nostrum contra utilitatem vestram, etsi quaedam 6 contra voluntatem fuerint, vere referri posse. An hoc, si Claudiae familiae non sim nec ex patricio sanguine ortus sed unus Quiritium quilibet, qui modo me duobus ingenuis ortum et vivere in libera civitate 7 sciam, reticere possim, L. illum Sextium et C. Licinium, perpetuos, si dis placet, tribunos, tantum licen-

¹ Claudiae gentis Ω (cf. Walters and Conway ad loc.):
claudiae genti ζ.

¹ See II. xvi. 4-5.

say that Appius Claudius Crassus, the decemvir's B.C. 368 grandson, moved more by hate and resentment than by hope, came forward to oppose them, and spoke to the following purpose: "It would be no strange or surprising thing to me, Quirites, if on this occasion I, too, should be taunted with the one reproach that rebellious tribunes have ever directed at our family, to wit, that the Claudian gens from its very origin has regarded no feature of our public life as more important than the majesty of the senate and has always opposed the interests of the plebs. The former of these charges I neither deny nor seek to refute—namely, that we have striven with all our might, from the day we were first called to be citizens and senators,¹ that, so far as in us lay, the dignity of those families with which you proposed to rank us might truthfully be said to have rather gained than lost; as to the other charge, I would venture to maintain, Quirites, speaking for myself and for my forefathers, that unless one should assume that what is done for the good of the whole nation is opposed to the welfare of the plebs,—as though they inhabited another city,—we have never wittingly done anything, whether as private citizens or magistrates, disadvantageous to the plebs; and that no word or act of ours can be truthfully alleged as being against your interests, though some there may have been which ran counter to your wishes. But were I not a Claudius, nor sprung from a patrician line, but were merely any one of the Quirites, assuming only that I knew my parents had both been born to freedom and that I lived in a free state, could I pass this by in silence? Are L. Sextius yonder and Gaius Licinius, our perpetual tribunes—tiae novem annis quibus regnant sumpsisse ut vobis negent potestatem liberam suffragii non in comitiis, non in legibus iubendis, se permissuros esse?

- 8 “ ‘Sub condicione’ inquit, ‘nos reficietis decimum tribunos.’ Quid est aliud dicere ‘quod petunt alii nos adeo fastidimus ut sine mercede magna non 9 accipiamus’? Sed quae tandem ista merces est qua vos semper tribunos plebis habeamus? ‘Ut rogationes’ inquit ‘nostras, seu placent seu displicent, seu utiles seu inutiles sunt, omnes coniunctim acci-
10 piatis.’ Obsecro vos, Tarquinii tribuni plebis, putate me ex media contione unum civem succlamare, ‘bona venia vestra liceat ex his rogationibus legere quas
11 salubres nobis censemus esse, antiquare alias.’ ‘Non’ inquit ‘licebit tu¹ de fenore atque agris quod ad vos omnes pertinet iubeas, et hoc portenti non fiat in urbe Romana uti L. Sextium atque hunc C. Licinium consules, quod indignaris, quod abominaris, videas;
12 aut omnia accipe, aut nihil fero’; ut si quis ei quem urgeat fames venenum ponat cum cibo et aut abstinere eo quod vitale sit iubeat aut mortiferum vitali admisceat. Ergo si esset libera haec civitas, non tibi frequentes succlamassent, ‘abi hinc cum tribunatibus ac rogationibus tuis!’ Quid? Si tu non tuleris quod commodum est populo accipere, nemo
13 erit qui ferat? Illud si quis patricius, si quis—quod illi volunt invidiosius esse—Claudius diceret, ‘aut

¹ licebit tu (tum O) Ω: licebit ut Madrig: licebit. Tu H. J. Mueller, Luterbacher: licebit. Tu—— videas? Alschefski: licebit ut et tu Conway.

¹ i.e., tribunes as tyrannical as the Tarquin kings.

save the mark !—grown so presumptuous in the nine years of their reign, as to threaten that they will leave you free to exercise your right of suffrage neither in elections nor in enacting laws ?

B.C. 30

“ ‘ On a certain condition,’ says one of them, ‘ you shall elect us tribunes for the tenth time ’ ; as though he were to say, ‘ What others sue for we are so surfeited withal that we will not accept it without a great reward.’ But what in short is that reward by the grant of which we may always have you for tribunes of the plebs ? ‘ That you adopt,’ says he, ‘ all our rogations in a lump, whether you like them or detest them,—be they good or bad.’ I beseech you, Tarquin tribunes of the plebs,¹ imagine me a simple citizen calling out from the midst of the assembly, ‘ By your good leave, suffer us to choose from these proposals those we regard as wholesome for us, and to reject the rest.’ ‘ No,’ he answers, ‘ you shall not have leave to enact the measures that concern you all, touching interest and lands, unless you will put up with the monstrous sight in Rome of Lucius Sextius and Gaius Licinius here as consuls—an idea you loathe and abominate ;—accept everything, or I offer nothing.’ As though a man were starving, and one should serve poison to him with his food, and command him either to abstain from what would give him life, or mix the deadly with the life-giving. Well then ! If this state were free, would not the people have cried out to you in full assembly, ‘ Begone, with your tribuneships and your rogations ! ’ Come ! If you will not propose what is profitable to the people to accept, shall there be none to do it ? Suppose that some patrician, or—what those fellows would make out to be still more hateful—some

- A U.C.
386
- omnia accipite, aut nihil fero,' quis vestrum, Quirites, 14 ferret? Numquamne vos res potius quam auctores spectabitis sed omnia semper quae magistratus ille dicet secundis auribus, quae ab nostrum quo dicentur adversis accipietis?
- 15 "At hercule sermo est minime civilis. Quid? Rogatio qualis est, quam a vobis antiquatam indignantur? Sermoni, Quirites, simillima. 'Consules'
- 16 inquit, 'rogo ne vobis quos velitis facere liceat.' An aliter rogat qui utique alterum ex plebe fieri consulem iubet nec duos patricios creandi potestatem
- 17 vobis permittit? Si hodie bella sint, quale Etruscum fuit cum Porsinna¹ Ianiculum insedit, quale Gallicum modo, cum praeter Capitolium atque arcem omnia haec hostium erant, et consulatum cum hoc M. Furio et quolibet alio ex patribus L. ille Sextius peteret, possetisne ferre Sextium haud pro dubio
- 18 consule² esse, Camillum de repulsa dimicare? Hocine est in commune honores vocare, ut duos plebeios fieri consules liceat, duos patricios non liceat? Et alterum ex plebe creari necesse sit, utrumque ex patribus praeterire liceat? Quaenam ista societas, quaenam consortio est? Parum est, si, cuius pars tua nulla adhuc fuit, in partem eius venis, nisi
- 19 partem petendo totum traxeris? 'Timeo' inquit, 'ne, si duos licebit creari patricios, neminem creetis

¹ The form Porsinna is used throughout this edition, though Ω here read Porsenna (persona B). Cf. Conway and Walters on II. ix. 1.

² consule Madvig: consulem Ω .

Claudius, should say, 'Either take all or I will propose nothing,' which of you, Quirites, would endure it? Will you never choose rather to look at facts than at advocates, but always lend ready ears to the utterances of that noble magistrate, and refuse to hear what is said by any of us?

"His language, you will admit, is far from appropriate in a free state; well, what of his rogation, which they resent your refusal to accept? Quirites, it is all of a piece with his words. 'I propose,' he says, 'that it shall not be permitted you to choose such consuls as you will.' For can aught else be his meaning, when he commands that in any case one consul be chosen from the plebs, and deprives you of the power to name two patricians? If wars should arise in these days, like the Etruscan war, when Porsinna held Janiculum, or like the Gallic war a little while ago, when all this City—except the Capitol and the Citadel—was in the hands of your enemies; and if Lucius Sextius were standing for the consulship, along with Marcus Furius here, and any other patrician whomsoever; could you endure that Lucius Sextius should be certain of election, while Camillus had to risk defeat? Is it thus they would equalize the opportunities of office? Would they authorize the election of two plebeian consuls, and forbid the choice of two patricians? Must we perforce take one plebeian, while for both places we may pass the patricians by? What sort of fellowship, of partnership, is this? Are you not satisfied to get a part of that in which you had no part before, unless in reaching for the part you can seize the whole? 'I fear' he replies, 'lest if it be permitted to choose two patricians, you may

A.U.C.
386

plebeium.' Quid est dicere aliud 'quia indignos vestra voluntate creaturi non estis, necessitatem 20 vobis creandi quos non vultis, imponam'? Quid sequitur, nisi ut ne beneficium quidem debeat populo, si cum duobus patriciis unus petierit plebeius et lege se, non suffragio, creatum dicat?

XLI. "Quomodo extorqueant, non quomodo petant honores, quaerunt; et ita maxima sunt adepturi, ut nihil ne pro minimis quidem debeant; et
 2 malunt. Est aliquis, qui se inspici, aestimari fastidiat, qui certos sibi uni honores inter dimicantes competitores aequum censeat esse, qui se arbitrio vestro exinat, qui vestra necessaria suffragia pro
 3 voluntariis et serva pro liberis faciat. Omitto Licinium Sextiumque, quorum annos in perpetua potestate tamquam regum in Capitolio numeratis: quis est hodie in civitate tam humilis cui non via ad consulatum facilior per istius legis occasionem quam nobis ac liberis nostris fiat? Si quidem nos ne cum volueritis quidem creare interdum poteritis, istos etiam si nolueritis necesse sit.

4 "De indignitate satis dictum est. At enim¹ dignitas ad homines pertinet. Quid de religionibus atque auspiciis, quae propria deorum immortalium contemptio atque iniuria est, loquar? Auspiciis hanc urbem conditam esse, auspiciis bello ac pace

¹ at enim Marvig: etenim Ω.

¹ Statues of the kings were set up on the Capitol, and on their bases were recorded the years they had reigned. But this had not yet been done in 368 B.C.

choose no one from the plebs.' His meaning is: B.C. 368
 'Since of your own accord you will never choose unworthy men, I will make it obligatory on you to elect those whom you do not wish.' What follows? Why, a man would not owe the people so much as thanks, if he were the sole plebeian candidate along with two patricians: he would say that he had been elected not by your suffrages, but by the statute.

XLI. "They would force us, not invite us, to grant them office; and thus they mean to win the very highest honours without incurring even such obligations as would be imposed by the least important. They would make their canvass not on worth but on opportunity. There is many a man who resents being investigated and appraised, who thinks it right that he alone should be certain of success, while his competitors are struggling for office; who would withdraw himself from your judgment; who would have you vote for him from compulsion, not from choice—not as freemen, but as slaves. I say nothing of Licinius and Sextius, whose years of continuous power you reckon like those of the kings on the Capitol:¹ who is there in the state to-day so lowly that the opportunities afforded by that law would not make access to the consulship easier for him than for us and for our children? To elect us will sometimes be beyond your power, even though you wish it; but those persons you would be compelled to elect, even against your inclinations.

"Of the indignity of the thing I have said enough. But dignity after all is concerned with men: what of religious observances and auspices—for the immortal gods are involved in insult and disrespect to these? That this City was founded under auspices;

domi militiaeque omnia geri, quis est qui ignoret?
 5 Penes quos igitur sunt auspicia more maiorum?
 Nempe penes patres; nam plebeius quidem magis-6 tratus nullus auspicato creatur; nobis adeo propria sunt auspicia ut non solum quos populus creat patricios magistratus non aliter quam auspicato creet, sed nos quoque ipsi sine suffragio populi auspicato interregem prodamus et privatim¹ auspicia habeamus, quae isti ne in magistratibus quidem 7 habent. Quid igitur aliud quam tollit ex civitate auspicia qui plebeios consules creando a patribus, 8 qui soli ea habere possunt, aufert? Eludant nunc licet religiones, 'quid enim esse, si pulli non pas-cantur,² si ex cavea tardius exierint, si occecinerit³ avis?' Parva sunt haec; sed parva ista non contemnendo maiores vestri maximam hanc rem fece-9 runt; nunc nos, tamquam iam nihil pace deorum opus sit, omnes caerimonias polluimus. Volgo ergo pontifices augures sacrificuli reges creentur; cuilibet apicem Dialem, dummodo homo sit, imponamus;
 tradamus ancilia, penetralia, deos deorumque curam

¹ privatim Ω: privati Crévier.

² esse—pascantur Madvig: est—pascentur Ω.

³ si occecinerit PFBTL: si occinerit U: si occecinerint
H: si hoc cecinerit DA: hoc cecinerit O: omitted by M (which has exierit ausis).

¹ The speaker alludes to two kinds of omens: (1) the general took with him to the field a coop of chickens, and if these, on being offered corn, came out and devoured it with avidity, the presage was favourable; this kind of divination was called ex tripudiis, from the way the corns danced upon the ground as they fell from the beaks of the greedy fowls; (2) the flight of certain birds was observed and any noise—such as the cry of a bird—was held to vitiate the auspice.

that all measures, warlike and peaceful, at home and B.C. 368 in the field, are carried out with auspices, who does not know? Who then control the auspices, by the tradition of our fathers? The patricians, to be sure; for no plebeian magistrate is elected under auspices; the auspices belong so exclusively to us, that not only are the patrician magistrates whom the people elect no otherwise elected than with auspices, but we ourselves even—without the people's suffrage—take auspices and nominate an interrex; and have, as private citizens, the right of taking them, which you plebeians have not even in your magistracies. He therefore deprives the state outright of auspices, who by electing plebeian consuls deprives the patricians of them—for they alone can take them. They may jeer now, if they like, at religious scruples. 'After all,' they will say, 'what difference does it make if the sacred chickens¹ will not feed; if they are slow to come out from the coop; if a bird utters an ill-omened cry?' These are trivial things; but because they did not scorn these trivial things, your fathers were able to build this great republic; and now we, as though we had no further use for Heaven's favour, are polluting all the ceremonies. Let pontiffs then, augurs, and kings of the sacrifices, be chosen from the vulgar herd; let us set the mitre of the Flamen Dialis on anybody's head, so he but be a man; let us make over the sacred shields, the inner shrine,² the gods and the service of the gods, to those whom we may not without sin intrust with them; let laws be proposed and magistrates elected

² In the Atrium of Vesta, where among other relics was preserved the Palladium.

A.U.C.
386

- 10 quibus nefas est; non leges auspicato ferantur, non magistratus creentur, nec centuriatis nec curiatis comitiis patres auctores fiant; Sextius et Licinius tamquam Romulus ac Tatius in urbe Romana regnent, quia pecunias alienas, quia agros dono dant.
- 11 Tanta dulcedo est ex alienis fortunis praedandi, nec in mentem venit altera lege solitudines vastas in agris fieri pellendo finibus dominos, altera fidem abrogari cum qua omnis humana societas tollitur?
- 12 Omnium rerum causa vobis antiquandas censeo istas rogationes. Quod faxitis deos velim fortunare.¹

A.U.C.
387

- XLII. Oratio Appi ad id modo valuit ut tempus
- 2 rogationum iubendarum proferretur. Refecti decumum iidem² tribuni, Sextius et Licinius, de decemviris sacrorum ex parte de plebe creandis legem pertulere. Creat quinque patrum, quinque plebis; graduque eo iam via facta ad consulatum videbatur.
- 3 Hac victoria contenta plebes cessit patribus ut in praesentia consulum mentione omissa tribuni militum crearentur. Creati A. et M. Cornelii iterum M. Geganius P. Manlius L. Veturius P. Valerius sextum.
- 4 Cum praeter Velitrarum obsidionem, tardi magis rem exitus quam dubii, quietae externae res Romanis essent, fama repens belli Gallici allata perpulit civitatem ut M. Furius dictator quintum diceretur. Is T. Quinctium Poenum magistrum equitum dixit.

¹ velim fortunare ζ: uel infortunare Ω: velinfortunare PFT.

² iidem ζ: idem Ω: id est P.

¹ See chap. xxxvii. § 12,

BOOK VI. XLI. 9—XLII. 4

without the approval of the auspices; neither to B.C. 368
centuriate nor curiate comitia let the patricians give their sanction; let Sextius and Licinius bear sway in Rome, like Romulus and Tatius—because they give away the moneys and the lands of others. Is it so sweet to plunder others of their fortunes?
Does it not occur to them that one of their laws will make vast deserts in the country-side, by driving the landlords out from their demesnes, while the other will wipe out credit, and with it all human intercourse? Upon every account I urge you to reject these bills; and may Heaven prosper what you do!”

XLII. The speech of Appius availed no further B.C. 367 than to put off the passing of the measures. Returned for the tenth time to office, the tribunes Sextius and Licinius obtained the enactment of a law requiring that half the board of ten who had charge of sacred rites should be plebeians.¹ Having elected five patricians and five plebeians, the people felt that they had set a precedent for the consulship.
Satisfied with their victory, the plebs gave way to the patricians, and relinquishing for the moment discussion about the consuls, permitted the election of military tribunes. Those chosen were Aulus and Marcus Cornelius (for their second terms), Marcus Geganius, Publius Manlius, Lucius Veturius, and (for the sixth time) Publius Valerius.

Rome's foreign relations were now peaceful everywhere except for the siege of Velitrae—the result of which, though delayed, was scarce in doubt—when a sudden rumour of a Gallic war drove the state to appoint Marcus Furius to his fifth dictatorship. He nominated Titus Quinctius Poenus to be

- 5 Bellatum cum Gallis eo anno circa Anienem flumen
 auctor est Claudius inclitamque in ponte pugnam, qua T. Manlius Gallum, cum quo provocatus manus conseruit, in conspectu duorum exercituum caesum 6 torque spoliavit, tum pugnatum.¹ Pluribus auctoribus magis adducor ut credam decem haud minus post annos ea acta, hoc autem anno in Albano agro 7 cum Gallis dictatore M. Furio signa conlata. Nec dubia nec difficilis Romanis, quamquam ingentem Galli terrorem memoria pristinae cladis attulerant, victoria fuit. Multa milia barbarorum in acie, multa 8 captis castris caesa; palati alii Apuliam maxime petentes cum fuga se longinqua, tum quod passim eos simul pavor errorque² distulerant, ab hoste³ tutati sunt. Dictatori consensu patrum plebisque triumphus decretus.
 9 Vixdum perfunctum eum bello atrocior domi
 seditio excepit, et per ingentia certamina dictator senatusque victus, ut rogationes tribuniciae accipe-rentur; et comitia consulum adversa nobilitate habita, quibus L. Sextius de plebe primus consul 10 factus. Et ne is⁴ quidem finis certaminum fuit.
 Quia patricii se auctores futuros negabant, prope

¹ pugnatum ς : pugnatum Ω .

² errorque Harant: terrorque Ω .

³ ab hoste Crévier: ab hoste sese Ω .

⁴ ne is ς : in his (or hiis or is) Ω .

¹ Quintus Claudius Quadrigarius, the annualist, cf. Vol. I., introd., p. xxx, and note 2.

² Livy himself narrates the episode as having occurred six years later; cf. Book VII. chapters ix-x. (361 B.C.).

master of the horse. Claudius¹ relates that the battle with the Gauls took place that year near the river Anio; and that this was the occasion of the famous duel on the bridge in which Titus Manlius slew a Gaul who had challenged him to combat, and despoiled him of his chain, while the two armies looked on. But I am more inclined to believe, with the majority of our authorities, that this exploit took place no less than ten years later,² and that in the year of which I am now writing, the dictator, Marcus Furius, fought a battle against the Gauls on Alban soil. Notwithstanding the great terror occasioned by the invasion of the Gauls and the recollection of their old defeat, the Romans gained a victory that was neither difficult nor uncertain. Many thousands of barbarians fell in battle, and many after the camp was taken. The others roamed about, making mostly towards Apulia, and owed their escape from the Romans to their distant flight and the dispersion which resulted from their panic and their straggling. The dictator was awarded a triumph with the consent of both senate and plebs.

Hardly had Camillus brought the war to an end, when he was confronted with a fiercer opposition in the City. After desperate struggles the senate and the dictator were beaten, and the measures advocated by the tribunes were adopted. An election of consuls was held, against the wishes of the nobles, and resulted in the choice of Lucius Sextius, the first of the plebeians to attain that honour. Even this did not end their disputes. The patricians declared that they would not ratify the election, and the affair had almost led to a

secessionem plebis res terribilesque alias minas 11 civilium certaminum venit, cum tandem¹ per dictatorem condicionibus sedatae discordiae sunt, concessumque ab nobilitate plebi de consule plebeio, a plebe nobilitati de praetore uno, qui ius in urbe 12 diceret, ex patribus creando. Ita ab diutina ira tandem in concordiam redactis ordinibus, cum dignam eam rem senatus censeret esse meritoque id, si quando unquam alias, deum immortalium fore² ut ludi maximi fierent et dies unus ad triduum adice-13 retur, recusantibus id munus aedilibus plebis, con-clamatum a patriciis est iuvenibus se id honoris 14 deum immortalium causa libenter facturos.³ Quibus cum ab universis gratiae actae essent, factum senatus consultum ut duumviros aediles ex patribus dictator populum rogaret, patres auctores omnibus eius anni comitiis fierent.

¹ tandem Perizonius: tamen Ω : tum tamen ζ Gruter.

² fore Mudrig: causa libenter facturos fore Ω .

³ facturos Alshefski: acturos Ω (and after that the words ut aediles fierent, which Conway brackets (Class. Quart. XII. (1918) p. 5).

secession of the plebs and threatened other terrible B.C. 367 embroilments, when the dictator finally proposed a compromise which allayed the discord; the nobles gave way to the plebs in regard to the plebeian consul, and the plebs conceded to the nobles that they might elect from the patricians one praetor to administer justice in the City.¹ Thus after their long quarrel the orders were reconciled at last. The senate decided that this was a fitting occasion to honour the immortal gods—who deserved it then, if ever at any time—by celebrating the Great Games, and voted that one day should be added to the customary three; this burden the aediles of the plebs refused to shoulder, whereupon the young patricians called out that they would willingly do it for the sake of honouring the gods. The entire people united in thanks to them, and the senate decreed that the dictator should hold a popular election of two aediles² to be chosen from the patricians, and that the Fathers should ratify all the elections of that year.

¹ This step was made necessary by the growth of the City and the increasing burden laid upon the consuls; but, as Livy intimates, it also served as partial compensation to the patricians for the privileges they were now forced to share with the plebs—until, in 337 B.C. (cf. VIII. xv. 9), the praetorship, too, was thrown open to the plebs.

² Later known as aediles curules. The provision that only patricians might be chosen was modified in the following year (cf. VII. i.).

LIBRI VI PERIOCHA

RES adversus Vulscos et Aequos et Praenestinos prospere gestas continet. Quattuor tribus adiectae sunt, Stellatina Tromentina¹ Sabatina Arniensis. M. Manlius, qui Capitolium a Gallis defenderat, cum obstrictos aere alieno liberaret, nexos exsolveret, crimine adfectati regni damnatus de saxo deiectus est; in cuius notam S.C. factum est, ne cui de Manlia gente Marco nomen² esset. C. Licinius et L. Sextius tribuni pl. legem promulgaverunt ut consules ex plebe fierent, qui ex patribus creabantur, eamque cum magna contentione repugnantibus patribus, cum idem tribuni pl. per quinquennium soli magistratus fuissent, pertulerunt; et primus ex plebe consul L. Sextius creatus est. Lata est et altera lex, ne cui plus quingentis iugeribus agri liceret possidere.

¹ Tromentina edd. : promentina MSS.

² Marco nomen Sigonius : manli cognomen or manlia cogn. or marco cogn. MSS.

SUMMARY OF BOOK VI

THE book contains the victorious campaigns against the Volsci, the Aequi, and the Praenestini. Four tribes were added, the Stellatina, the Tromentina, the Sabatina, and the Arniensis. Marcus Manlius, who had defended the Capitol against the Gauls, after liberating the debtors and releasing those whose persons had been seized, was found guilty of aiming at sovereignty, and was flung from the Rock; to stigmatize him the senate decreed that none of the Manlian family should bear the name of Marcus.¹ Gaius Licinius and Lucius Sextius, tribunes of the plebs, proposed a law that the consuls, who were formerly chosen from the patricians, might be elected from the plebs, and in a strenuous struggle against the opposition of the patricians, carried their point, after these same tribunes of the plebs had for five years been the only magistrates,² and Lucius Sextius was the first plebeian to be elected consul. Another law was also passed, that none might hold above five hundred iugera of land.

¹ Livy himself ascribes the decree to the Manlian gens (chap. xx. § 14).

² Cf. Livy chap. xxxv. § 10.

BOOK VII

LIBER VII

A.U.C.
388-389

- I. ANNUS hic erit insignis novi hominis consulatu, insignis novis duobus magistratibus, praetura et curuli aedilitate. Hos sibi patricii quaesivere honores pro concesso plebi altero consulatu. Plebes consulatum
- 2 L. Sextio, cuius lege partus erat, dedit: patres praeturam Sp. Furio M. f. Camillo, aedilitatem Cn. Quinctio Capitolino et P. Cornelio Scipioni, suarum gentium viris, gratia campestri ceperunt. L. Sextio collega ex patribus datus L. Aemilius Mamercus.¹
- 3 Principio anni et de Gallis, quos primo palatos per Apuliam congregari iam fama erat, et de Hernicorum
- 4 defectione agitata mentio. Cum de industria omnia, ne quid per plebeium consulem ageretur, proferrentur, silentium omnium rerum ac iustitio simile
- 5 otium fuit, nisi quod non patientibus tacitum tribunis, quod pro consule uno plebeio tres patricos magistratus curulibus sellis praetextatos tamquam consules

¹ Mamercus Ω Diod. xv. lxxxii, i, Cassiod.: Mamercinus Pighius (C.I.L. 1², p. 126).

¹ Where the voting took place.

BOOK VII

I. THIS year will stand out as the one in which a “new man” held the consulship, and also for the establishment of two new magistracies, the praetorship and the curule aedileship. These dignities the patricians had devised for themselves, to compensate them for the second consulship, which they had granted to the commons. The plebs bestowed their consulship on Lucius Sextius, by whose law it had been won. The patricians, through their influence in the Campus Martius,¹ obtained the praetorship for Spurius Furius Camillus, the son of Marcus, and the aedileship for Gnaeus Quintius Capitolinus and Publius Cornelius Scipio, who belonged to their own houses. Lucius Aemilius Mamerkus was chosen from the patricians as colleague of Lucius Sextius. Early in the year there was some talk about the Gauls—who having at first scattered through Apulia were now rumoured to be gathering—and about a defection on the part of the Hernici. The patricians purposely deferred all action, in order that the plebeian consul might have no hand in anything; it seemed from the general hush and lack of bustle as though a cessation of the courts had been proclaimed; save that the tribunes would not suffer it to pass in silence that the nobles, in return for one plebeian consul, had got three patrician magistrates for themselves, who wore the purple-bordered toga and sat, like consuls,

B.C.
366-365

A.U.C.
388-389

6 sedentes nobilitas sibi sumpsisset, praetorem quidem etiam iura reddentem et collegam consulibus atque iisdem auspiciis creatum, verecundia inde imposita est senatui ex patribus iubendi aediles curules creari. Primo ut alternis annis ex plebe fierent convenerat: postea promiscuum fuit.

7 Inde L. Genucio et Q. Servilio consulibus et ab seditione et a bello quietis rebus, ne quando a metu 8 ac periculis vacarent, pestilentia ingens orta. Censorem, aedilem curulem, tres tribunos plebis mortuos ferunt, pro portione et ex multitudine alia multa
funera fuisse; maximeque eam pestilentiam insignem 9 mors quam matura, tam acerba M. Furi fecit. Fuit enim vere vir unicus in omni fortuna, princeps pace
belloque, priusquam exsulatum iret, clarior in exsilio, vel desiderio civitatis, quae capta absentis imploravit opem, vel felicitate qua restitutus in patriam secum¹ 10 patriam ipsam restituit; par deinde per quinque et viginti annos—tot enim postea vixit—titulo tantae gloriae fuit dignusque habitus quem secundum a Romulo conditorem urbis Romanae ferrent.

A.U.C.
390

II. Et hoc et insequenti anno C.² Sulpicio Petico
2 C. Licinio Stolone consulibus pestilentia fuit. Eo nihil dignum memoria actum, nisi quod pacis deum

¹ restitutus in patriam secum Ω: restitutus secum O: restitutus H.

² C. Glareanus, Sigonius (Diod. xv. xcv. 1 and Cassiod., cf. C.I.L.: 1², p. 126 and chap. xvii. § 13): T. Ω: L. L?: omitted by A.

in curule chairs, while the praetor even dealt out justice—having been elected as a colleague to the consuls and under the same auspices. In consequence of this criticism the senate was ashamed to order that the curule aediles be chosen from the patricians. At first it was arranged to take them from the plebs in alternate years: later the election was thrown open without distinction.

Then came the consulship of Lucius Genucius and Quintus Servilius. There was neither party strife nor war to disturb the peace, but lest there should ever be freedom from fear and danger, a great pestilence broke out. It is stated that a censor, a curule aedile, and three plebeian tribunes died, with a correspondingly large number from the rest of the population. But what chiefly made this pestilence noteworthy was the death of Marcus Furius, who, though ripe in years, was bitterly regretted. For he was truly a man of singular excellence whether in good or evil fortune; foremost in peace and in war before his banishment, and in exile even more distinguished, whether one thinks of the yearning of his countrymen who called on him in his absence to save their captured City, or of the success with which on being restored to his country he restored the country itself at the same time; after this for five and twenty years—for he survived so long—he maintained his glorious reputation, and was deemed worthy of being named next after Romulus, as Rome's second Founder.

II. The pestilence lasted during both this and the following year, the consulship of Gaius Sulpicius Peticus and Gaius Licinius Stolo. In the latter year nothing memorable occurred, except that with the

B.C.
366-365

B.C. 364

exposcendae causa tertio tum post conditam urbem
 3 lectisternium fuit. Et cum vis morbi nec humanis consiliis nec ope divina levaretur, victis superstitione animis ludi quoque scenici, nova res bellicoso populo—nam circi modo spectaculum fuerat,—inter alia caelestis irae placamina instituti dicuntur; 4 ceterum parva quoque,¹ ut ferme principia omnia, et ea ipsa peregrina res fuit. Sine carmine ullo, sine imitandorum carminum actu, ludiones ex Etruria
 acciti ad tibicinis modos saltantes haud indecoros 5 motus more Tusco dabant. Imitari deinde eos iuventus, simul inconditis inter se iocularia fundentes versibus, coepere; nec absoni a voce motus erant.
 6 Accepta itaque res saepiusque usurpando excitata.
 Vernaculis artificibus, quia ister Tusco verbo ludio vocabatur, nomen histrionibus inditum; qui non,
 7 sicut ante, Fescennino versu similem incompositum² temere ac rudem alternis iaciebant, sed impletas
 modis saturas descripto iam ad tibicinem cantu motuque congruenti peragebant.

¹ parva quoque Ω: parva haec quoque Eussner: parva ea quoque Madvig (which would require—as Walters and Conway note—the deletion of ea before ipsa).

² incompositum Ω: compositum Sigonius, Karsten.

¹ The first lectisternium was in 399 B.C., and is described at v. xiii. 5 sq. The second is not mentioned by Livy. It may have occurred in 392 (v. xxxi. 5).

² Livy distinguishes five stages in the development of scenic entertainments: (1) dances, accompanied by the flute; (2) improvisation of rude verses in addition to the music and dancing; (3) medleys, of a musical character, accompanied by flute and dance; (4) the comedy with a regular plot, special singers for the lyric parts, etc.; (5) the addition of an after-play, exodium or Atellana. With this account, Horace, Epistles II. i. 139 ff. should be compared.

object of appeasing the divine displeasure they made B.C. 364 a lectisternium, or banquet to the gods, being the third in the history of the City;¹ and when neither human wisdom nor the help of Heaven was found to mitigate the scourge, men gave way to superstitious fears, and, amongst other efforts to disarm the wrath of the gods, are said also to have instituted scenic entertainments. This was a new departure for a warlike people, whose only exhibitions had been those of the circus; but indeed it began in a small way, as most things do, and even so was imported from abroad.² Without any singing, without imitating the action of singers, players who had been brought in from Etruria danced to the strains of the flautist and performed not ungraceful evolutions in the Tuscan fashion. Next the young Romans began to imitate them, at the same time exchanging jests in uncouth verses, and bringing their movements into a certain harmony with the words. And so the amusement was adopted, and frequent use kept it alive. The native professional actors were called histriones, from ister, the Tuscan word for player; they no longer—as before—alternately threw off rude lines hastily improvised, like the Fescennines,³ but performed medleys, full of musical measures, to melodies which were now written out to go with the flute, and with appropriate gesticulation.

³ The name was derived by the ancients either from Fescennia, a place in Etruria, or from fascinum, a phallic symbol.

- A.U.C. 8 Livius post aliquot annis, qui ab saturis ausus¹ est 390 primus argumento fabulam serere, idem scilicet—id quod omnes tum erant—suorum carminum actor, 9 dicitur, cum saepius revocatus vocem obtudisset, venia petita puerum ad canendum ante tibicinem cum statuisset, canticum egisse aliquanto magis vigente motu, quia nihil vocis usus impediēbat.
 10 Inde ad manum cantari histrionibus coeptum, diver-11 biaque² tantum ipsorum voci relicta. Postquam lege hac fabularum ab risu ac soluto ioco res avoca-batur et ludus in artem paulatim verterat, iuventus histrionibus fabellarum actu relicto ipsa inter se more antiquo ridicula intexta versibus iactitare coepit; unde exorta quae exodia³ postea appellata 12 consertaque fabellis potissimum Atellanis sunt; quod genus ludorum ab Oscis acceptum tenuit iuventus nec ab histrionibus pollui passa est; eo institutum manet ut actores Atellanarum nec tribu moveantur et stipendia, tamquam expertes artis ludicrae, faciant.
 13 Inter aliarum parva principia rerum ludorum quoque prima origo ponenda visa est, ut appareret quam ab

¹ ausus Ω: aversus ausus Cornelissen.

² diverbiaque ζ: deuerbiaque (deuerbia quae M: deuerbi atque B) Ω.

³ unde exorta quae exodia Alschefski: unde exodia quae (or que) exordia *MA*²ζ: quae (or que) exordia HTDLAR: quae (or que) unde exodia PBO! : quae inde exodia *F*ζ: quae exodia *T*¹ (or *T*²) *D*³: unde exodia Conway.

¹ Livius Andronicus, a Greek captured at Tarentum, produced the first translation of a Greek play into Latin, in 240 B.C.

² Atella was a little town in Campania. Atellanae were coarse farces presenting certain stock characters, Maccus, Pappus, Bucco, and Dossenus. The Oscans were a branch of the Samnites and lived in Campania.

BOOK VII. II. 8-13

Livius ¹ was the first, some years later, to abandon saturae and compose a play with a plot. Like everyone else in those days, he acted his own pieces; and the story goes that when his voice, owing to the frequent demands made upon it, had lost its freshness, he asked and obtained the indulgence to let a boy stand before the flautist to sing the monody, while he acted it himself, with a vivacity of gesture that gained considerably from his not having to use his voice. From that time on actors began to use singers to accompany their gesticulation, reserving only the dialogue parts for their own delivery. When this type of performance had begun to wean the drama from laughter and informal jest, and the play had gradually developed into art, the young men abandoned the acting of comedies to professionals and revived the ancient practice of fashioning their nonsense into verses and letting fly with them at one another; this was the source of the after-plays which came later to be called exodia, and were usually combined with Atellan farces. The Atellan was a species of comedy acquired from the Oscans,² and the young men kept it for themselves and would not allow it to be polluted by the professional actors; that is why it is a fixed tradition that performers of Atellan plays are not disfranchised, but serve in the army as though they had no connexion with the stage.³ Amongst the humble origins of other institutions it has seemed worth while to set down the early history of the play, that it might be seen how sober were the beginnings of

³ Actors were regularly reckoned in the aerarii or lowest class of citizens, who were not permitted to serve in the army.

A.U.C.
390

sano initio res in hanc vix opulentis regnis tolerabilem insaniam venerit.

A.U.C.
391

- III. Nec tamen ludorum primum initium procurandis religionibus datum aut religione animos
 2 aut corpora morbis levavit; quin etiam, cum medios forte ludos circus Tiberi superfuso inrigatus impedisset, id vero, velut aversis iam dis aspernantibusque placamina irae, terrorem ingentem fecit.
 3 Itaque Cn.¹ Genucio L. Aemilio Mamercio² iterum consulibus, cum piaculorum magis conquisitio animos quam corpora morbi adficerent, repetitum ex seniorum memoria dicitur pestilentiam quondam clavo ab dic-
 4 tatore fixo sedatam. Ea religione adductus senatus dictatorem clavi figendi causa dici iussit; dictus L. Manlius Imperiosus L. Pinarium magistrum equitum dixit.
 5 Lex vetusta est, priscis litteris verbisque scripta, ut qui praetor maximus sit idibus Septembribus clavum pangat; fixa fuit dextro lateri aedis Iovis optimi maximi, qua parte³ Minervae templum est.
 6 Eum clavum, quia rarae per ea tempora litterae erant, notam numeri annorum fuisse ferunt eoque Minervae templo dicatam legem quia numerus an art that has nowadays reached a point where B.C. 364 opulent kingdoms could hardly support its mad extravagance.

¹ Cn. Sigonius (cf. Diod. xvi. ii. 1, C.I.L. i², p. 126): C Ω: Claudio O.

² Mamercio Ω (cf. chap. i. § 2): Mamercino Pighius (Diod. omits the cognomen here).

³ qua parte (Walters in his note): .ea. qua parte H: ea qua parte Ω: ea parte qua U: ex qua parte Gronovius.

III. However, the plays thus for the first time B.C. 363 introduced by way of expiation neither freed men's minds of religious fears nor their bodies of disease. Indeed, it fell out quite otherwise; for the games were in full swing when an inundation of the Tiber flooded the circus and put a stop to them, an accident which—as though the gods had already turned away, rejecting the proffered appeasement of their anger—filled the people with fear. And so when Gnaeus Genucius and Lucius Aemilius Mamercus (for the second time) were consuls, and men's minds were more troubled by the search for means of propitiation than were their bodies by disease, it is said that the elders recollected that a pestilence had once been allayed by the dictator's driving a nail.¹ Induced thereto by this superstition, the senate ordered the appointment of a dictator to drive the nail. Lucius Manlius Imperiosus was appointed, and named Lucius Pinarius master of the horse.

There is an ancient law, recorded in archaic words and letters, that the chief magistrate shall on the thirteenth of September drive a nail; the tablet was formerly affixed to the right side of the temple of Jupiter Optimus Maximus, where Minerva's chapel is. This nail served, they say, in those days of little writing, to mark the number of years, and the law was confided to the chapel of Minerva, for the reason

¹ The instance here referred to may have occurred in 435 B.C., when Quintus Servilius Priscus was dictator (IV. xxi. 6–9).

A.U.C.
392

alienis quam in proximis ac sanguine ipse¹ suo
 4 exerceret. Criminique ei tribunus inter cetera dabat quod filium iuvenem, nullius probri compertum, extor-
 rem urbe domo penatibus, foro luce congressu aequa-
 lium prohibitum, in opus servile, prope in carcerem
 5 atque in ergastulum dederit, ubi summo loco natus
 dictatorius iuvenis cotidiana miseria disceret vere
 imperioso patre se natum esse. At quam ob noxam?
 6 Quia infacundior sit et lingua impromptus; quod
 naturae damnum utrum nutriendum patri, si quic-
 quam in eo humani esset, an castigandum ac vexatione
 insigne faciendum fuisse? Ne mutas quidem bestias
 minus alere ac fovere si quid ex progenie sua parum
 7 prosperum sit; at hercule L. Manlium malum malo augere filii et tarditatem ingenii insuper premere, et,
 si quid in eo exiguum naturalis vigoris sit, id ex-
 stinguere vita agresti et rustico cultu inter pecudes
 habendo.

V. Omnium potius his criminationibus quam
 ipsius iuvenis inritatus est animus; quin contra se
 quoque parenti causam invidiae atque criminum
 2 esse aegre passus, ut omnes di hominesque scirent
 se parenti opem latam quam inimicis eius malle,
 capit consilium rudis quidem atque agrestis animi
 et² quamquam non civilis exempli, tamen pietate

¹ ipse ς : ipso Ω .² et Ω : sed Wesenberg.

he used as freely with his nearest friends and his own family as with strangers. Amongst other charges the tribune cited the man's behaviour to his son: the youth, he said, had been found guilty of no misconduct, yet Manlius had excluded him from the City, from his home and household gods, from the Forum, the light of day, and the fellowship of his young friends, consigning him to slavish drudgery in a kind of gaol or work-house, where a youth of distinguished birth and the son of a dictator might learn by his daily wretchedness how truly "imperious" was the father that had begot him. Yes, but what was the young man's fault? Why, he had been a little slow of speech—unready with his tongue! But ought not his father to have healed and mended this infirmity of nature—if he had a particle of humanity about him—instead of chastising it and by persecution making it conspicuous? Why even the dumb brutes, if one of their young is unfortunate, do none the less cherish it and foster it. But Lucius Manlius was aggravating his son's evil plight by evil treatment, and was doubling the burden on his heavy wits; and any spark of native talent that might be there he was quenching in the rustic life and clownish bringing up amongst the dumb brutes where he kept him.

V. Everyone was incensed by these charges, except the young man himself. He, on the contrary, was vexed to be the cause of additional dislike and accusation of his father; and that all gods and men might know that he had rather help his father than his father's enemies, he conceived a plan, in keeping to be sure with his rude and uncouth spirit, which, though it set no pattern of civic conduct, was yet

A.U.C.
392

alienis quam in proximis ac sanguine ipse¹ suo
 4 exerceret. Criminique ei tribunus inter cetera dabat
 quod filium iuvenem, nullius probri compertum, extor-
 rem urbe domo penatibus, foro luce congressu aequa-
 lium prohibitum, in opus servile, prope in carcerem
 5 atque in ergastulum dederit, ubi summo loco natus
 dictatorius iuvenis cotidiana miseria disceret vere
 imperioso patre se natum esse. At quam ob noxam?
 6 Quia infacundior sit et lingua impromptus; quod
 naturae damnum utrum nutriendum patri, si quic-
 quam in eo humani esset, an castigandum ac vexatione
 insigne faciendum fuisse? Ne mutas quidem bestias
 minus alere ac fovere si quid ex progenie sua parum
 7 prosperum sit; at hercule L. Manlium malum malo
 augere filii et tarditatem ingenii insuper premere, et,
 si quid in eo exiguum naturalis vigoris sit, id ex-
 stinguere vita agresti et rustico cultu inter pecudes
 habendo.

V. Omnium potius his criminationibus quam
 ipsius iuvenis inritatus est animus; quin contra se
 quoque parenti causam invidiae atque criminum
 2 esse aegre passus, ut omnes di hominesque scirent
 se parenti opem latam quam inimicis eius malle,
 capit consilium rudis quidem atque agrestis animi
 et² quamquam non civilis exempli, tamen pietate

¹ ipse ε: ipso Ω.² et Ω: sed Wesenberg.

he used as freely with his nearest friends and his own family as with strangers. Amongst other charges the tribune cited the man's behaviour to his son: the youth, he said, had been found guilty of no misconduct, yet Manlius had excluded him from the City, from his home and household gods, from the Forum, the light of day, and the fellowship of his young friends, consigning him to slavish drudgery in a kind of gaol or work-house, where a youth of distinguished birth and the son of a dictator might learn by his daily wretchedness how truly "imperious" was the father that had begot him. Yes, but what was the young man's fault? Why, he had been a little slow of speech—unready with his tongue! But ought not his father to have healed and mended this infirmity of nature—if he had a particle of humanity about him—instead of chastising it and by persecution making it conspicuous? Why even the dumb brutes, if one of their young is unfortunate, do none the less cherish it and foster it. But Lucius Manlius was aggravating his son's evil plight by evil treatment, and was doubling the burden on his heavy wits; and any spark of native talent that might be there he was quenching in the rustic life and clownish bringing up amongst the dumb brutes where he kept him.

V. Everyone was incensed by these charges, except the young man himself. He, on the contrary, was vexed to be the cause of additional dislike and accusation of his father; and that all gods and men might know that he had rather help his father than his father's enemies, he conceived a plan, in keeping to be sure with his rude and uncouth spirit, which, though it set no pattern of civic conduct, was yet

A.U.C.
392

- 3 laudabile. Inscientibus cunctis cultro succinctus mane in urbem atque a porta domum confestim ad M. Pomponium tribunum pergit; ianitori opus esse sibi domino eius convento extemplo ait; nuntiaret
- 4 T. Manlium L. filium esse. Mox introductus—etenim percitum ira in patrem spes erat aut criminis aliquid novi aut consilii ad rem agendam deferre—salute accepta redditaque esse ait quae cum eo agere
- 5 arbitris remotis velit. Procul inde omnibus abire iussis cultrum stringit et super lectum stans ferro intento, nisi in quae ipse concepisset verba iuraret se patris eius accusandi causa concilium plebis nunquam habiturum, se eum extemplo transfixurum
- 6 minatur. Pavidus tribunus, quippe qui ferrum ante oculos micare, se solum inermem, illum praevalidum iuvenem, et, quod haud minus timendum erat, stolide ferocem viribus suis cerneret, adiurat in quae adactus est verba; et, prae se deinde tulit ea vi subactum se
- 7 incepto destitisse. Nec perinde ut maluisset plebes sibi suffragii ferendi de tam crudeli et superbo reo potestatem fieri, ita aegre habuit filium id pro parente ausum; eoque id laudabilius erat quod animum eius tanta acerbitas patria nihil a pietate
- 8 avertisset. Itaque non patri modo remissa causae praiseworthy for its filial piety. Without anybody's B.C. 362 knowledge, he girded himself with a knife in the early morning, and coming to the City, made his way at once from the gate to the house of Marcus Pomponius, the tribune. There he told the porter that he must see his master instantly, and bade him say that it was Titus Manlius, the son of Lucius. Being presently admitted—for it seemed likely that he was moved with wrath against his father, or was bringing some fresh charge or plan of action—he received and returned the salutation of his host, and then announced that there were matters of which he wished to speak to him without witnesses. When they had all been sent away, he drew his knife, and standing over the tribune's couch with his weapon ready, he threatened that unless the man should swear, in the terms he himself should dictate, never to hold a council of the plebs for the purpose of accusing his father, he would immediately stab him. The frightened tribune, seeing the blade flash in his face, and perceiving himself to be alone and unarmed, and the other to be a stalwart youth, and, what was no less terrifying, foolhardy by reason of his strength, took the oath that was required of him, and afterwards publicly declared that he had been compelled by force to relinquish his undertaking. And the plebs, however much they would have liked to be given the opportunity to cast their votes in the case of so cruel and insolent a defendant, were yet not displeased that a son had dared such a deed in defence of his parent; and they praised it all the more, because the father's shocking harshness had made no difference in the son's filial devotion. And so not only was the arraignment of the father dis-

A.U.C., 392

dictio est, sed ipsi etiam adulescenti ea res honori 9 fuit, et cum eo anno primum placuisset tribunos militum ad legiones suffragio fieri—nam antea,¹ sicut nunc quos Rufulos vocant, imperatores ipsi
 faciebant,—secundum in sex locis tenuit, nullis
 domi militiaeque ad conciliandam gratiam meritis, ut qui rure et procul coetu hominum iuventam egisset.

VI. Eodem anno, seu motu terrae seu qua vi alia, forum medium ferme specu vasto conlapsum in im-mensam altitudinem dicitur; neque eam voraginem 2 coniectu terrae, cum² pro se quisque gereret, expleri³
 potuisse, priusquam deum monitu quaeri coeptum 3 quo plurimum populus Romanus posset; id enim illi loco dicandum vates canebant, si rem publicam Romanam perpetuam esse vellent. Tum M. Curtium, iuvenem bello egregium, castigasse ferunt dubitantes
 an ullum magis Romanum bonum quam arma virtus-4 que esset, et⁴ silentio facto templa deorum immorta-lium, quae foro imminet, Capitoliumque intuentem et manus nunc in caelum nunc in patentes terrae hiatus ad deos manes porrigentem se devovisse; 5 equo deinde quam poterat maxime exornato insidentem armatum se in specum immisisse, dona-que ac fruges super eum a multitudine virorum ac
 mulierum congestas, lacumque Curtium non ab

¹ nam antea Duker: nam et antea Ω.

² cum Ω: quam Gronovius. ³ expleri *I*³⁵:- explere Ω.

⁴ esset, et Madvig: esset Ω.

¹ Pseudo-Asconius, on Cic. Act 1 in Verr. 30 says: "There are two kinds of military tribunes, the first consisting of those called Rufuli; these are ordinarily appointed in the army; the others are the comitiati, who are designated at the comitia in Rome."

missed, but the youth himself gained distinction from the affair; for in the election of military tribunes for the legions, which had that year for the first time been resolved upon—until then the generals themselves had nominated them, as they do to-day those who are known as *Rufuli*¹—he was chosen second of the six, though neither at home nor in the field had he done aught to merit popularity, and no wonder, since his youth had been passed in the country, remote from the gatherings of men. B.C. 362

VI. That same year, whether owing to an earthquake or to some other violent force, it is said that the ground gave way, at about the middle of the Forum, and, sinking to an immeasurable depth, left a prodigious chasm. This gulf could not be filled with the earth which everyone brought and cast into it, until admonished by the gods, they began to inquire what it was that constituted the chief strength of the Roman People; for this the soothsayers declared that they must offer up, as a sacrifice to that spot, if they wished the Roman Republic to endure. Thereupon Marcus Curtius, a young soldier of great prowess, rebuked them, so the story runs, for questioning whether any blessing were more Roman than arms and valour. A hush ensued, as he turned to the temples of the immortal gods which rise above the Forum, and to the Capitol, and stretching forth his hands, now to heaven, and now to the yawning chasm and to the gods below, devoted himself to death. After which, mounted on a horse caparisoned with all possible splendour, he plunged fully armed into the gulf; and crowds of men and women threw offerings and fruits in after him. It was he, they say, and not Curtius Mettius, the soldier

- antiquo illo T. Tati milite Curtio Mettio sed ab 6 hoc appellatum. Cura non deesset, si qua ad verum via inquirentem ferret; nunc fama rerum standum est, ubi certam derogat vetustas fidem; et lacus nomen ab hac recentiore insignitius fabula est.
- 7 Post tanti prodigii procurationem eodem anno de Hernicis consultus senatus cum fetiales ad res repe-tendas nequiquam misisset, primo quoque die feren-dum ad populum de bello indicendo Hernicis censuit, populusque id bellum frequens iussit. L. Genucio 8 consuli ea provincia sorte evenit. In expectatione civitas erat, quod primus ille de plebe consul bellum suis auspiciis gesturus esset, perinde ut evenisset
 res ita communicatos honores pro bene aut secus 9 consulto habitura. Forte ita tulit casus ut Genucius ad hostes magno conatu profectus in insidias praeci-pitaret et ¹ legionibus necopinato pavore fuis consul circumventus ab insciis quem interceptissent ² occi-10 deretur. Quod ubi est Romam nuntiatum, nequaquam tantum publica calamitate maesti patres quantum feroces infelici consulis plebei ductu, fremunt omnibus locis: irent crearent consules ex 11 plebe, transferrent auspicia quo nefas esset; potuisse patres plebi scito pelli honoribus suis: num etiam
 in deos immortales inauspicatam legem valuisse?

¹ praecipitaret et Duker: praecipitaret M: praecipitaretur Ω .

² interceptissent Madvig: interfecissent Ω .

¹ See I. xii. 10 and xiii. 5, with note.

² The law had been passed in the comitia tributa presided over by a tribune, who had not the right to take auspices.

of Titus Tatius in days of old, who gave his name to B.C. 362
the Curtian Lake.¹ Diligence would not be wanting, were there any path which could lead the inquirer to the truth; as it is, one must hold by the tradition, where antiquity will not allow us to be certain; and the name of the pool is better known from this more recent legend.

After the expiation of this great portent, the senate dealt in the same year with the question of the Hernici, and having dispatched fetials to demand reparations, without avail, resolved to submit to the people for their approval, at the earliest possible day, a declaration of war against that nation. In a crowded assembly the people voted for war, and the consul Lucius Genucius was by lot intrusted with the conduct of it. The citizens were in a fever of suspense, since he would be the first plebeian consul to conduct a war under his own auspices, and they would judge by the sequel whether they had done well or ill to throw these honours open. It so happened that Genucius, marching in great force against the enemy, plunged into an ambuscade. The legions, in a sudden panic, were put to flight, and the consul was surrounded and slain by men who knew not whom they had taken. When the news reached Rome, the patricians, by no means so cast down by the general disaster as elated at the unlucky generalship of the plebeian consul, filled the City with their taunts. Let them go and choose consuls from the plebs! Let them transfer the auspices to those who might not have them without sin! They had been able by a plebiscite to expel the patricians from their rightful honours: had their unsanctioned² law prevailed also against the immortal gods? The gods them-

Vindicasse ipsos suum numen, sua auspicia, quae ut primum contacta sint ab eo a quo nec ius nec fas fuerit, deletum cum duce exercitum documento fuisse ne deinde turbato gentium iure comitia 12 haberentur. His vocibus curia et forum personat. Ap. Claudium, quia dissuaserat legem, maiore nunc auctoritate eventum reprehensi ab se consilii incusantem, dictatorem consensu patriciorum Servilius consul dicit, dilectusque et iustitium indictum.

VII. Priusquam dictator legionesque novae in Hernicos venirent, ductu C. Sulpici legati res per 2 occasionem gesta egregie est. In Hernicos, morte consulis contemptim ad castra Romana cum haud dubia expugnandi spe succedentes, hortante legato et plenis irae atque indignitatis militum animis eruptio est facta. Multum ab spe adeundi valli res Hernicis afuit; adeo turbatis inde ordinibus
 3 abscessere. Dictatoris deinde adventu novus veteri exercitus iungitur et copiae duplicantur; et pro contione dictator laudibus legati militumque, quorum virtute castra defensa erant, simul audientibus laudes meritas tollit animos, simul ceteros ad aemulandas
 4 virtutes acuit. Neque segnius ad hostes bellum apparatus, qui et parti ante decoris memores neque

selves had vindicated their divine authority and their auspices; for these had no sooner been touched by one who had no legal or religious warranty for so doing, than the army and its general had been annihilated, as a lesson never again to overturn the rights of the patrician families in conducting an election. Such words as these resounded through the Curia and the Forum. Appius Claudius had urged the rejection of the law, and this now gave his words the greater weight, as he denounced the outcome of a policy which he himself had censured. Him, therefore, the consul Servilius, with the approval of the patricians, appointed dictator. An enrolment was proclaimed, and the courts were suspended.

VII. But before the dictator and his new levies were got to the country of the Hernici, the lieutenant Gaius Sulpicius, profiting by a favourable opportunity, had fought a brilliant engagement. The Hernici, whom the consul's death had made contemptuous, approached the Roman camp with every expectation of taking it by storm; but the soldiers, heartened by their general and bursting with anger and resentment, made a sortie, and so far were the Hernici from attacking the stockade, as they had hoped to do, that they actually fell back in confusion from the ground. Then came the dictator, and the new army was joined to the old and the forces doubled. Calling the men together, Appius lauded the lieutenant and his soldiers, by whose bravery the camp had been defended; thus at the same stroke he encouraged those who heard themselves deservedly commended, and stimulated the others to emulation of their conduct. Nor were the enemy less energetic in making ready for the war; mindful of the glory they had won

ignari auctarum virium hostis¹ suas quoque vires augment. Omne Hernicum nomen, omnis militaris aetas excitur; quadringenariae octo cohortes, lecta 5 robor virorum, scribuntur. Hunc eximium florem iuventutis eo etiam quod ut duplex acciperent stipendium decreverant, spei animorumque implevare; immunes quoque operum militarium erant, ut in unum pugnae laborem reservati plus sibi quam 6 pro virili parte adnitendum scirent; extra ordinem etiam in acie locati quo conspectior virtus esset.

Duum milium planities castra Romana ab Hernicis
 7 dirimebat; ibi pari ferme utrimque spatio in medio pugnatum est. Primo stetit ambigua spe pugna nequiquam saepe conatis equitibus Romanis impetu 8 turbare hostium aciem. Postquam equestris pugna effectum quam conatibus vanior erat, consulto prius dictatore equites, permissu deinde eius relictis equis, clamore ingenti provolant ante signa et novam inte-9 grant pugnam. Neque sustineri poterant, nisi extra-ordinariae cohortes pari corporum animorumque robore se obiecissent.

VIII. Tunc inter primores duorum populorum res geritur; quidquid hinc aut illinc communis Mars belli² aufert, multiplex quam pro numero damnum
 est. Volgus aliud armatorum, velut delegata
 primoribus pugna, eventum suum in virtute aliena

¹ hostis Ω : hosti Gronovius,

² belli Sigonius: bello Ω ,

before, and aware that the forces of their adversaries B.C. 362 had been augmented, they also strengthened theirs. All who bore the name of Hernici and were of military age were called upon, and eight cohorts were formed, each numbering four hundred of their best men. This choice flower of their manhood they inspired with additional hope and courage by a decree which allowed them double pay. They were exempted, also, from military tasks, in order that, being reserved for the one labour of fighting, they might be sensible of an obligation to exert themselves beyond the capacity of ordinary men. Finally, they were assigned a post in the battle outside the line, to make their bravery the more conspicuous.

A plain extending for two miles separated the Roman camp from the Hernici. In the middle of this plain, at a spot almost equidistant from both camps, the battle was fought. At first the event of the struggle was in doubt and nothing came of the oft-repeated attempts of the Roman horse to break the enemy's line. Finding their charges ineffectual, despite their efforts, they consulted the dictator and with his permission left their horses, and, rushing to the front with a mighty cheer, inaugurated a new kind of fighting. There would have been no stopping them, had it not been for the special cohorts, who flung themselves across their path with a vigour and gallantry equal to their own.

VIII. The struggle then lay between the best men of both nations, and whatever losses the chance of war inflicted on either side were serious out of all proportion to their number. The common herd of soldiers, as though they had made over the battle to their betters, rested their future on the bravery of ponit. Multi utrimque cadunt, plures volnera 2 accipiunt; tandem equites alius alium increpantes, quid deinde restaret quaerendo, si neque ex equis pepulissent hostem neque pedites quicquam momenti facerent? Quam tertiam exspectarent pugnam?

A.U.C.
392

 Quid ante signa feroces prosiluissent et alieno pug-
 3 narent loco?—his inter se vocibus concitati clamore renovato inferunt pedem et primum gradu moverunt
 hostem, deinde pepulerunt, postremo iam haud 4 dubie avertunt; neque, tam vires pares quae supera-verit res facile dictu est, nisi quod perpetua fortuna utriusque populi et extollere animos et minuere 5 potuit. Usque ad castra fugientes Hernicos Romanus sequitur: castrorum oppugnatione, quia serum erat diei, abstinuere;—diu non perlitatum tenuerat dictatorem, ne ante meridiem signum dare posset;
 6 eo in noctem tractum erat certamen.—Postero die deserta fuga castra Hernicorum et saucii relict quidam inventi, agmenque fugientium ab Signinis,¹ cum praeter moenia eorum infrequentia conspecta signa essent, fusum ac per agros trepida fuga palatum 7 est. Nec Romanis incruenta victoria fuit: quarta pars militum amissa, et ubi haud minus iacturae fuit, aliquot equites Romani cecidere.

A.U.C.
393

IX. Insequenti anno cum C. Sulpicius² et C.
 Licinius Calvus consules in Hernicos exercitum

¹ Signinis Crévier: signis Ω.

² C. Sulpicius Sigonius (Diod. xvi. vi, 1, C.I.L. i², p. 126)
 l. sulpicius Ω.

others. Many on both sides were slain and more were wounded. At length the knights began to rail at one another. What else, they asked, was there to do, if they had neither beaten the enemy when mounted, nor were able to accomplish anything on foot? What third kind of battle were they waiting for? What good had they done by dashing boldly out in front of the line and fighting in a place that belonged to others? Stirred by these mutual reproaches, they advanced with renewed cheering, and first they made the enemy yield, then forced them back, and finally routed them in no uncertain fashion. What it was that turned the scale, where forces were so evenly matched, would be hard to say, unless the fortune regularly attendant on each nation had the power to quicken or to daunt their resolution. The Romans chased the fleeing Hernici clear to their camp, which, owing to the lateness of the hour, they refrained from attacking;—the dictator had been unable to give the battle-signal before noon, having failed for a long time to obtain favourable omens, for which reason the struggle had been protracted until night.—On the following day the camp was discovered to have been deserted by the fleeing Hernici, and a few of their wounded were found, whom they had left behind. The column of fugitives was passing the walls of Signia, when the townsfolk espied their thinly attended ensigns, and falling upon them, scattered them in headlong flight across the country. Yet the Romans got no bloodless victory: they lost a fourth part of their foot, and a number of Roman horsemen fell, which was no less grave a loss.

IX. Next year the consuls Gaius Sulpicius and Gaius Licinius Calvus led an army against the

A.U.C.
393

duxissent neque inventis in agro hostibus Ferentium urbem eorum vi cepissent, revertentibus inde
 2 eis Tiburtes portas clausere. Ea ultima fuit causa, cum multae ante querimoniae ultro citroque iactatae essent, cur per fetiales rebus repetitis bellum Tiburti populo indiceretur,

3 Dictatorem T. Quinctium Poenum eo anno fuisse satis constat et magistrum equitum Ser. Cornelium
 4 Maluginensem. Macer Licinius comitiorum habendorum causa et ab Licinio consule dictum scribit, quia collega comitia bello praeferre festinante ut continuaret consulatum, obviam eundem pravae
 5 cupiditati fuerit. Quaesita ea propriae¹ familiae laus leviolem auctorem Licinium facit. Cum mentionem eius rei in vetustioribus annalibus nullam inveniam, magis ut belli Gallici causa
 6 dictatorem creatum arbitrer inclinat animus. Eo certe anno Galli ad tertium lapidem Salaria via trans pontem Anienis castra habuere.

Dictator cum tumultus Gallici causa iustitium edixisset, omnes iuniores sacramento adigit ingentique exercitu ab urbe profectus in citeriore ripa
 7 Anienis castra posuit. Pons in medio erat, neutris eum rumpentibus, ne timoris indicium esset. Proelia de occupando ponte crebra erant, nec qui poterentur

¹ propriae *A*5 : propria Q.

¹ Tribune of the plebs in 73 B.C. and author of annals written from the democratic standpoint (Introd. p. xxix).

Hernici, and not finding the enemy abroad, captured their city of Ferentinum by assault. As they were returning thence, the men of Tibur closed their gates against them. Many complaints had before this been bandied back and forth between the two peoples, but this new offence made the Romans finally determine that after sending the fetials to demand redress they would declare war on the Tiburtine people. B.C. 361

It is well established that Titus Quinctius Poenus was dictator that year and that Servius Cornelius Maluginensis was master of the horse. Licinius Macer¹ states that the appointment was for the purpose of holding an election and was made by Licinius the consul, who, because his colleague was in haste to hold the election before the campaign, so that he might succeed himself in the consulship, felt obliged to thwart his evil designs. But the praise which he seeks to bestow on his own family makes the testimony of Licinius less weighty, and since I find no mention of the circumstance in the older annals, I am more disposed to think that it was a Gallic war which occasioned the appointment of a dictator. In any case, this was the year in which the Gauls encamped at the third milestone on the Salarian road, beyond the bridge over the Anio.

The dictator having, by reason of the Gallic rising, proclaimed a suspension of the courts, administered the oath to all of military age. Then marching out of the City with a great army he pitched his camp on the hither bank of the stream. The bridge lay between, and neither side would break it down, lest it be regarded as a sign of fear. There were frequent skirmishes for the possession of the bridge, and yet, so evenly matched were their forces, it could not be

A.U.C.
393

8 incertis viribus satis discerni poterat. Tum eximia corporis magnitudine in vacuum pontem Gallus processit et quantum maxima voce potuit, "Quem nunc" inquit "Roma virum fortissimum habet, procedat agedum ad pugnam, ut noster duorum eventus ostendat utra gens bello sit melior."

X. Diu inter primores iuvenum Romanorum silentium fuit, cum et abnuere certamen vererentur
 2 et praecipuam sortem periculi petere nollent; tum T. Manlius L. filius, qui patrem a vexatione tribunicia vindicaverat, ex statione ad dictatorem pergit. "Iniussu tuo" inquit, "imperator, extra ordinem nunquam pugnaverim, non si certam victoriam
 3 videam; si tu permittis, volo ego illi beluae ostendere, quando adeo ferox praesultat hostium signis, me ex ea familia ortum quae Gallorum
 4 agmen ex rupe Tarpeia deiecit." Tum dictator "Macte virtute" inquit "ac pietate in patrem patriamque, T. Manli, esto. Perge et nomen
 5 Romanum invictum iuvantibus dis praesta." Armant inde iuvenem aequales; pedestre scutum capit, Hispano cingitur gladio ad propiorem habili pugnam; armatum adornatumque adversus Gallum stolidelactum et—quoniam id quoque memoria dignum antiquis visum est—linguam etiam ab inrisu exserentem
 6 producant. Recipiunt inde se ad stationem, et duo in medio armati spectaculi magis more quam lege belli destituuntur, nequaquam visu ac specie
 7 aestimantibus pares. Corpus alteri magnitudine

¹ The Spanish sword was short and pointed, and a sword of this type—required by the story—is what Livy means. The name for it is anachronistic here.

determined who were masters of it. Then a Gaul B.C. 331 of extraordinary size advanced upon the empty bridge, and making his voice as loud as possible, cried out, "Let him whom Rome now reckons her bravest man come out and fight, that we two may show by the outcome which people is the superior in war."

X. The young Roman nobles were for a long time silent. Ashamed to decline the challenge, they were loath to volunteer for a service of transcendent peril. Then Titus Manlius, the son of Lucius, who had rescued his father from the persecution of the tribune, left his station and went to the dictator.
"Without your orders, General," he said, "I would fain never leave my place to fight, not though I saw that victory was assured; but if you permit me, I would show that beast who dances out so boldly before the standards of the enemy, that I come of the family that hurled the column of Gauls from the Tarpeian Rock." To whom the dictator made answer, "Success attend your valour, Titus Manlius, and your loyalty to father and to country! Go, and with Heaven's help make good the unconquerable Roman name." The young man's friends then armed him; he assumed the shield of a foot-soldier, and to his side he buckled a Spanish sword, convenient for close fighting.¹ Armed and accoutred, they led him forth to the Gaul, who in his stupid glee—for the ancients have thought even this worth mentioning—thrust his tongue out in derision.
They then retired to their station, and the two armed men were left by themselves in the midst, like gladiators more than soldiers, and by no means evenly matched, to judge from outward show. One eximium, versicolori veste pictisque et auro caelatis refulgens armis: media in altero militaris statura modicaque in armis habilibus magis quam decoris 8 species. Non cantus, non exsultatio armorumque agitatio vana, sed pectus animorum iraeque tacitae plenum; omnem ferociam in discrimen ipsum certa-9 minis distulerat. Ubi constitere inter duas acies, tot circa mortalium animis spe metuque pendentibus, Gallus velut moles superne imminens proiecto laeva scuto in advenientis arma hostis vanum caesim cum 10 ingenti sonitu ensem deiecit; Romanus mucrone subrecto,¹ cum scuto scutum inum perculisset totoque corpore interior periculo vulneris factus insinu-asset se inter corpus armaque, uno alteroque subinde ictu ventrem atque inguina hausit et in spatium 11 ingens ruentem porrexit hostem. Iacentis inde corpus ab omni alia vexatione intactum uno torque

 spoliavit, quem respersum cruore collo circumdedit 12 suo. Defixerat pavor cum admiratione Gallos:
 Romani alacres ab statione obviam militi suo pro-gressi,² gratulantes laudantesque ad dictatorem 13 perducunt. Inter carminum prope in modum³ in-condita quaedam militariter ioculantes Torquat

¹ subrecto (sur- D^3) Ω : Walters and Conway suggest subrecto (cf. VIII. viii. 10).

² progressi D^2 (or D^3) A^2 (or A^1): praegressi (or \bar{p} -) Ω .

³ in modum Madvig: modum Ω : modo Conway (cf. IV. xx. 2).

¹ i.e. the man with a chain, or necklace.

had a body extraordinary for its size, and resplendent B.C. 361 in a coat of shifting hues and armour painted and chased with gold: the other was of a middling stature for a soldier, and his arms were but indifferent to look at, being suitable but not ornate.
 He neither sang nor danced about with idle flourishes
 of his weapons, but his bosom swelled with courage and silent wrath, and all his ferocity was reserved for the crisis of the combat. When they had taken their ground between the two embattled armies, while the hearts of the surrounding multitude were suspended betwixt hope and fear, the Gaul, whose huge bulk towered above the other, advanced his shield with the left arm, to parry the attack of his oncoming enemy, and delivered a slashing stroke with his sword, that made a mighty clatter but did no harm. The Roman, with the point of his weapon raised, struck up his adversary's shield with a blow from his own against its lower edge: and slipping in between the man's sword and his body, so close that no part of his own person was exposed, he gave one thrust and then immediately another, and gashing
 the groin and belly of his enemy brought him headlong to the ground, where he lay stretched out over a monstrous space. To the body of his fallen foe he offered no other indignity than to despoil it of one thing—a chain which, spattered with blood, he cast round his own neck. The Gauls were transfixed with fear and wonder, while the Romans, quitting their station, ran eagerly to meet their champion and brought him with praise and gratulation to the dictator. Amidst the rude banter thrown out by the soldiers in a kind of verse, was heard the appellation of Torquatus,¹ and thereafter

A.U.C.
393

cognomen auditum; celebratum deinde posteris
14 etiam familiaeque honori fuit. Dictator coronam auream addidit donum mirisque pro contione eam pugnam laudibus tulit.

A.U.C.
394

XI. Et hercule tanti ea ad unversi belli eventum momenti dimicatio fuit ut Gallorum exercitus proxima nocte relictis trepide castris in Tiburtem agrum atque inde societate belli facta commeatuque benigne ab Tiburtibus adiutus mox in Campaniam
2 transierit. Ea fuit causa cur proximo anno C. Poetelius¹ Balbus consul, cum collegae eius M. Fabio Ambusto Hernici provincia evenisset, adversus
3 Tiburtes iussu populi exercitum duceret. Ad quorum auxilium cum Galli ex Campania redissent, foedae populationes in Labicano Tusculanoque et Albano agro haud dubie Tiburtibus ducibus sunt factae;
4 et cum adversus Tiburtem hostem duce consule contenta res publica esset, Gallicus tumultus dictatorem creari coegit. Creatus Q. Servilius Ahala T. Quinctium magistrum equitum dixit et ex auctoritate patrum, si prospere id bellum evenisset, ludos
5 magnos vovit. Dictator, ad continendos proprio bello Tiburtes consulari exercitu iusso manere, omnes iuniores nullo detractante militiam sacramento adegit. Pugnatum haud procul porta Collina
6

¹ Poetelius Sigonius (C. I. L. i², pp. 126, 130): poetilius C: petelius B: petilius B¹ L: poetiosus (?) D: poetibus D² (or L¹): poetilib' A: potilius A². Similar corruptions in §§ 7, 9, 10.

this was given currency as an honoured surname, B.C. 361 used even by descendants of the family. The dictator gave him, besides, a golden chaplet, and loudly extolled that fight of his in a public speech.

XI. And in fact the combat was of so great B.C. 360 consequence to the issue of the whole war, that the army of the Gauls withdrew in trepidation from their camp on the succeeding night and crossed over into the territory of Tibur. There they formed a military alliance with the Tiburtes, and having been liberally assisted by them with provisions, they soon departed and went into Campania. This was the reason why in the following year the consul Gaius Poetelius Balbus, when his colleague Marcus Fabius Ambustus had been appointed to the campaign with the Hernici, was commanded by the people to march against the men of Tibur. To aid their allies, the Gauls returned from Campania, and the cruel devastations which ensued in the districts of Labici, Tusculum, and Alba were clearly instigated and directed by the Tiburtes. Against the Tiburtine foe the state was satisfied to be commanded by a consul; but the Gallic invasion required the appointment of a dictator. The choice fell on Quintus Servilius Ahala, who designated Titus Quinctius master of the horse, and, instructed by the senate, made a vow to celebrate the Great Games, in the event of a successful termination of the war. Directing the consular army to remain where they were, in order to confine the Tiburtes to their own field of action, the dictator administered the oath to all the young men, none of whom endeavoured to avoid the service.
 The battle was fought not far from the Colline

- est totius viribus urbis in conspectu parentum coniugumque ac liberorum quae magna etiam absentibus hortamenta animi tum subiecta oculis simul vere-
- 7 cundia misericordiaque militem accendebant. Magna utrimque edita caede avertitur tandem acies Gallorum. Fuga Tibur sicut arcem belli Gallici petunt; palati a consule Poetelio haud procul Tibure excepti, egressis ad opem ferendam Tiburtibus simul cum iis
- 8 intra portas compelluntur. Egregie cum ab dictatore tum ab consule res gesta est. Et consul alter Fabius proeliis primum parvis, postremo una insigni pugna, cum hostes totis adorti copiis essent, Hernicos
- 9 devincit. Dictator consulibus in senatu et apud populum magnifice conlaudatis et suarum quoque rerum illis remisso honore dictatura se abdicavit. Poetelius de Gallis Tiburtibusque geminum triumphum egit: Fabio satis visum ut ovans urbem iniret.
- 10 Inridere Poeteli triumphum Tiburtes: ubi enim eum secum acie conflixisse? Spectatores paucos fugae trepidationisque Gallorum extra portas egressos, postquam in se quoque fieri impetum viderint et sine discrimine obvios caedi, recepisse
- 11 se intra urbem: eam rem triumpho dignam visam Romanis. Ne nimis mirum magnumque censerent

Gate. The Romans put forth all their strength B.C. 360 in full sight of their parents and their wives and children. These are powerful incentives to courage even when unseen, but being then in full view, set the soldiers on fire with a sense of honour and compassion. The slaughter was great on both sides, but at last the Gallic army was driven off. In their flight they turned towards Tibur, as though it had been the stronghold of the Gallic war; as they straggled on, they encountered the consul Poetelius, not far from the town, and when the Tiburtes came out to their assistance they were beaten back through the gates along with the Gauls. The affair was admirably handled by the consul as well as by the dictator. And the other consul Fabius defeated the Hernici—at first in little skirmishes, but ultimately in one remarkable battle, in which the enemy attacked with all their forces. The dictator, having handsomely lauded the consuls in the senate and before the people, even giving them the credit for his own achievements, resigned his office. Poetelius celebrated a double triumph over the Gauls and the Tiburtes: it was thought enough for Fabius that he should enter the City in an ovation.

The Tiburtes ridiculed the triumph of Poetelius. Where was it, they asked, that he had fought a battle with them? A handful of people had gone outside the gates to look on at the flight and panic of the Gauls, and finding that they too were attacked and that all who came in the way of the Romans were cut down without discrimination, had retired within their walls; this was the great achievement that the Romans had deemed worthy of a triumph! That they might not regard it as too wonderful and

A.U.C.
394

tumultum exciere in hostium portis, maiorem ipsos
trepidationem ante moenia sua visuros.

A.U.C.
395-396

XII. Itaque insequenti anno M. Popilio¹ Laenate
Cn. Manlio consulibus primo silentio noctis ab
Tibure agmine infesto profecti ad urbem Romam
2 venerunt. Terrorem repente ex somno excitatis subita res et nocturnus pavor praebuit, ad hoc multorum inscitia, qui aut unde hostes advenissent;
3 conclamatum tamen celeriter ad arma est et portae stationibus murique praesidiis firmati; et ubi prima lux mediocrem multitudinem ante moenia neque aliud quam Tiburtem hostem ostendit, duabus portis
egressi consules utrimque aciem subeuntium iam
4 muros adgrediuntur, apparuitque occasione magis quam virtute fretos venisse: adeo vix primum impetum Romanorum sustinuerunt. Quin etiam bono fuisse Romanis adventum eorum constabat orientem-que iam seditionem inter patres et plebem metu tam propinqui belli compressam.

5 Alius adventus hostium fuit² agris terribilior³:
6 populabundi Tarquinienses fines Romanos, maxime qua ex parte Etruriam adiacent, peragrare rebusque nequiquam repetitis novi consules iis C. Fabius et C. Plautius iussu populi bellum indixere; Fabioque ea provincia, Plantio Hernici evenere.

¹ Popilio (or Popillio) Sigonius (cf. Diod. xvi. xv. 1 and chap. xxiii. § 1): pōpilio H: pōnpilio B: pompilio Ω.

² fuit Madvig: fuit proximo bello Ω.

³ terribilior 5, Walters: quam terribilior urbi Ω: quam urbi terribilior *D*² (or *D*³) *R*².

great a thing to cause a flurry at their enemy's gates, they should themselves behold a greater panic in front of their own walls. B.C. 360

XII. Accordingly, in the following year, when B.C.
359-358 Marcus Popilius Laenas and Gnaeus Manlius were consuls, a hostile expedition set out from Tibur and arrived in the first silence of the night, at the walls of Rome. It was terrifying to be suddenly waked out of sleep by a surprise and a night alarm; moreover many of the people knew not who their enemies were nor whence they had come; nevertheless the call to arms was quickly given, and watches were set at the gates and the walls were manned. And when the first light showed the enemy before the City to be in no great force, and only the men of Tibur, the consuls sallied out at two gates and assailed them on both flanks as they were now drawing near the walls. It was evident that in coming they had relied more on opportunity than on courage, for they scarcely withstood the first shock of the Roman onset. In fact their expedition was confessedly a good thing for the Romans, and the fear occasioned by so near an enemy repressed a quarrel that was already in the air, between the patricians and the plebs.

Another hostile incursion was more terrifying to the countryside. The Tarquinienses, bent on plundering, ranged over the Roman territory, particularly that part which adjoins Etruria; and demands for reparation proving futile, the new consuls, Gaius Fabius and Gaius Plautius, declared war against them, as commanded by the people. This campaign fell to Fabius, that against the Hernici to Plautius.

A.U.C.
395-296

- 7 Gallici quoque belli fama increbrescebat. Sed inter multos terrores solacio fuit pax Latinis petentibus data, et magna vis militum ab iis¹ ex foedere vetusto, quod multis intermiserant annis, accepta.
- 8 Quo praesidio cum fulta res Romana esset, levius fuit quod Gallos mox Praeneste venisse atque inde
- 9 circa Pedum consedissee auditum est. Dictatorem dici C. Sulpicium placuit; consul ad id accitus C. Plautius dixit; magister equitum dictatori additus M. Valerius. Hi roboram militum ex duobus consularibus exercitibus electa adversus Gallos duxerunt.
- 10 Lentius id aliquanto bellum, quam parti utrique placebat, fuit. Cum primo Galli tantum avidi certaminis fuissent, deinde Romanus miles ruendo in arma ac dimicationem aliquantum Gallicam ferociam
- 11 vinceret, dictatori nequiquam placebat, quando nulla cogeret res, fortunae se committere adversus hostem, quem tempus deteriorem in dies faceret, locis alienis² sine praeparato commeatu, sine firmo munimento morantem, ad hoc iis³ corporibus animisque, quorum omnis in impetu vis esset, parva eadem languesceret mora.
- 12 His consiliis dictator bellum trahebat gravemque edixerat poenam, si quis iniussu in hostem pugnasset. Milites aegre id patientes primo in stationibus vigiliisque inter se dictatorem sermonibus carpere, in-

¹ iis ζ : hiis A: his Ω .

² faceret locis alienis Madvig: et locis alienis faceret Ω : et locus alienus faceret ζ Gelenius, Gebhard.

³ iis ζ : is D: hiis A: his Ω .

Ramours of a Gallic war began also to be rife. B.C.
359-358
 But with many perils, there was this consolation, that they had granted peace to the Latins, at their desire, and had received a large force of soldiers from them, under the terms of an ancient treaty which the Latins had for many years disregarded. Thus strengthened, the Romans heard soon after with small concern that the Gauls had come to Praeneste and had then pitched their camp in the vicinity of Pedum. They resolved on making Gaius Sulpicius dictator, and sent for Gaius Plautius the consul to appoint him; Marcus Valerius was named as his master of the horse. These two marched against the Gauls, with the choicest troops from both the consular armies.

The war was considerably more protracted than was pleasing to either side. At first only the Gauls had been eager for battle; but later the Romans far exceeded the Gauls in the ardour with which they would run to arm themselves and fight. Yet the dictator was by no means willing, being under no compulsion, to hazard his fortune against an enemy whom each day made less formidable, as he lingered on in an unfriendly country, without a magazine of food, and without adequate defences—an enemy, too, whose strength and courage lay wholly in attacking, and languished as soon as there came a slight delay.

Upon these considerations the dictator spun out the war and threatened to punish anyone severely who should fight the enemy without his orders. The soldiers were mortified at this. At first they grumbled among themselves about the dictator, when on picket-duty or watching in the night, and terdum patres communiter increpare, quod non 13 iussissent per consules geri bellum: electum esse eximium imperatorem, unicum ducem, qui nihil agenti sibi de caelo devolaturam in sinum victoriam censeat. Eadem deinde haec interdiu propalam ac ferociora his iactare: se iniussu imperatoris aut dimi-14 caturos aut agmine Romam ituros. Immiscerique militibus centuriones, nec in circulis modo fremere sed iam in principiis ac praetorio in unum sermones confundi atque in contionis magnitudinem crescere turba et vociferari ex omnibus locis ut extemplo ad

 dictatorem iretur; verba pro exercitu faceret Sex.
 Tullius, ut virtute eius dignum esset.

XIII. Septimum primum pilum iam Tullius ducebat, neque erat in exercitu, qui quidem pedestria
 2 stipendia fecisset, vir factis nobilior. Is praecedens militum agmen ad tribunal pergit mirantique Sulpicio
 non turbam magis quam turbae principem Tullium, 3 imperiis oboedientissimum militem, "Si licet, dictator," inquit "condemnatum se universus exercitus
 a te ignaviae ratus et prope ignominiae causa desti-tutum sine armis oravit me ut suam causam apud te 4 agerem. Equidem, sicubi loco cessum, si terga data hosti, si signa foede amissa obici nobis possent, tamen 396

sometimes railed at the senators collectively for not having given the consuls charge of the war; a fine general they had chosen, a unique commander, who thought that without his lifting a finger victory would fly down from heaven into his lap! But they presently began to utter these same sentiments quite openly and in the light of day, and even bolder things than these: they would not wait, they declared, for the general's orders, but would either fight or go in a body to Rome. The centurions began to mingle with the soldiers; the murmuring was not confined to little knots of men, but in the main street and before the commander's tent there was now one general clamour; the throng increased to the bigness of an assembly, and on every side shouts were heard that they should go instantly to the dictator, and that Sextus Tullius should be spokesman for the army, as became his courage.

XIII. It was now the seventh campaign in which Tullius had served as first centurion, nor was there anyone in the army, at least among the foot-soldiers, more distinguished for his services. At the head of the men, who followed in a body, he approached the platform, where the amazement of Sulpicius on seeing the mob was not greater than at seeing it led by Tullius, a soldier most obedient to authority. "By your leave, Dictator," he began, "the entire army, deeming itself condemned in your mind for cowardice and almost deprived of its arms by way of humiliation, has asked me to plead its cause with you. For my part, even if we could be taunted with anywhere quitting a post, with turning our backs on the foe, with shamefully losing our standards, I should still think you ought to hearken hoc a te impetrari aequum censerem ut nos virtute

B.C.
359-358

 culpam nostram corrigere et abolere flagitii memoriam
 5 nova gloria patereris. Etiam ad Alliam fusae legiones eandem quam per pavorem amiserant patriam pro-fectae postea a Veiiis¹ virtute recipere. Nobis deum benignitate, felicitate tua populique Romani, 6 et res et gloria est integra. Quamquam de gloria vix dicere ausim, si nos et hostes haud secus quam feminas abditos intra vallum omnibus contumeliis eludunt, et tu imperator noster—quod aegrius pa-
 timur - exercitum tuum sine animis, sine armis, sine manibus iudicas esse, et, priusquam expertus nos
 esses, de nobis ita desperasti ut te mancorum ac 7 debilium ducem iudicares esse. Quid enim aliud esse causae credamus, cur veteranus dux, fortissimus bello, compressis, quod aiunt, manibus sedeas? Utcumque enim se habet res, te de nostra virtute 8 dubitasse videri quam nos de tua verius est. Sin autem non tuum istuc sed publicum est consilium, et consensus aliqui patrum, non Gallicum bellum,
 nos ab urbe a penetibus nostris ablegatos tenet, quaeso ut ea quae dicam non a militibus imperatori dicta censeas sed a plebe patribus,—quae si, ut²
 vos vestra habeatis consilia, sic se sua habituram 9 dicat, quis tandem succenseat?—milites nos esse, non servos vestros, ad bellum, non in exsilium missos;
 si quis det signum, in aciem educat, ut viris ac

¹ a Veiiis Alschevski (cf. iv. xxxi. 9): ab Veis *I*² (or *D*²):
 ab Veiiis 5: ab eis Ω: ab eius T.

² si, ut Madvig: sicut Ω: sic FB: sic ut D: sit ut L.

to our entreaty that we be permitted to redeem our fault with valour, and by winning new renown blot out the memory of our disgrace. Even the legions that were routed at the Allia afterwards set out from Veii and by manful conduct won back the very City their cowardice had lost. In our case, thanks to the kindness of the gods and to your good fortune and that of the Roman People, both our cause and our glory are unimpaired. Yet I hardly dare to mention glory, since the enemy flout us with every species of insult, as though we were women cowering behind our rampart; and since you, our general—a thing far harder to bear—regard us as an army without spirit, without swords, and without hands, and ere you have given us a trial, have so despaired of us as to reckon yourself a commander of cripples and weaklings. For how else can we account for it, that you, an experienced and fearless general, should, as they say, be sitting down with folded hands? Indeed, however this may be, it is more reasonable that you should seem to distrust our bravery, than that we should seem to distrust yours. But if this is not your own but public policy, and if some agreement amongst the senators, and not the Gallic war, keeps us in exile from the City and from our homes, then I beg you to hear what I have to say, as though it were spoken not by his soldiers to a general but by the plebs to the patricians for if the plebs, even as you have your policies, should assert that they proposed likewise to have theirs, who, pray, could be angry with them? I say, then, we are your soldiers, not your slaves; you have sent us to war, not into banishment; if anyone would give us the signal and lead us into battle, we are

B.C.
359—58

- Romanis dignum sit, pugnatu-
ros; si nihil armis opus
sit, otium Romae potius quam in castris acturos.
- 10 Haec dicta sint patribus. Te, imperator, milites tui oramus ut nobis pugnandi copiam facias. Cum vincere cupimus, tum te duce vincere, tibi lauream insignem deferre, tecum triumphantes urbem inire, tuum sequentes currum Iovis optimi maximi templum
- 11 gratantes ovantesque adire." Orationem Tulli exceperunt preces multitudinis, et undique ut signum
daret, ut capere arma iuberet, clamabant.

XIV. Dictator quamquam rem bonam exemplo haud probabili actam censebat, tamen facturum quod milites vellent in se¹ recepit, Tulliumque secreto quaenam haec res sit aut quo acta more 2 percontatur. Tullius magno opere a dictatore petere ne se oblitum disciplinae militaris, ne sui neve imperatoriae maiestatis crederet: multitudini concitatae, quae ferme auctoribus similis esset, non subtraxisse se ducem ne quis alius, quales mota 3 creare multitudo soleret, exsisteret; nam se quidem nihil non arbitrio imperatoris acturum. Illi quoque tamen videndum magno opere esse ut exercitum in potestate haberet; differri non posse adeo concitados
animos; ipsos sibi locum ac tempus pugnandi sump-4 tuos, si ab imperatore non detur. Dum haec loquun-

¹ in se Weissenborn: se Ω

ready to quit us in the fight like men and Romans : B.C. 359-358
 but if there be no occasion for our arms, we had rather spend our leisure in Rome than in a camp. Thus much we would say to the patricians. But of you, our general, we, your soldiers, beg that you give us an opportunity of fighting. We are eager not only to conquer, but to conquer under your leadership; to win for you the glorious laurel; to enter the City with you in the march of triumph; and following your chariot, to approach the throne of Jupiter Optimus Maximus with gratulations and rejoicings." The speech of Tullius was supported by the entreaties of the crowd, who on all sides clamoured for the signal and the command to arm.

XIV. Though the dictator felt that a good thing had been carried out in a way to set a bad example, yet he undertook to do as the soldiers wished. In private he questioned Tullius what this proceeding meant and on what precedent he had acted. Tullius earnestly besought the dictator not to believe that he had forgotten the training of a soldier, nor forgotten himself and the honour due to his commander: the crowd, he said, had become excited; crowds were generally like their leaders, and he had not refused to lead it, for fear that some other might come forward, of the sort that an unruly mob was likely to choose; for his own part he would do nothing without the approval of his general. But Sulpicius, he continued, must none the less be very wary himself, to keep the army in hand; postponement would not do, where feelings were so exasperated; the men would choose for themselves a time and place for fighting, if their general did not provide them. While they were talking thus,

- tur, iumenta forte pascentia extra vallum Gallo abigenti duo milites Romani ademerunt. In eos saxa coniecta a Gallis; deinde ab Romana statione
 5 clamor ortus ac procursum utrimque est. Iamque haud procul iusto proelio res erat,¹ ni celeriter diremptum certamen per centuriones esset; adfirmata certe eo casu Tulli apud dictatorem fides est; nec recipiente iam dilationem re in posterum diem edicitur acie pugnatu-
 6 Dictator tamen, ut qui magis animis quam viribus fretus ad certamen descenderet, omnia circumspicere atque agitare coepit ut arte aliqua terrorem hostibus incuteret. Sollerti animo rem novam excogitat, qua
 7 quoque quidam aetate, usi sunt. Mulis strata detrahi iubet binisque tantum centunculis relictis agasones partim captivis partim agrorum armis ornatos im-
 8 ponit. His fere mille effectis centum admiscet equites et nocte super castra in montes evadere ac silvis se occultare iubet neque inde ante movere
 9 quam ab se acceperint² signum. Ipse, ubi inluxit, in radicibus montium extendere aciem coepit sedulo,
 10 ut adversus montes consisteret hostis instructos³ vani terroris apparatu, qui quidem terror plus paene

¹ erat 5: erant Ω.² acceperint Frag. Haverk.: acceperent PFB: ac|caeperent M: acciperent Ω.³ instructos Foster (adopting the punct. of Wallers and Conway, instead of hostis. Instructo—profuit, primo of previous edd.): instructo Ω.

¹ e. g. C. Marius at Aquae Sextiae (Frontinus, II. iv. 6), and Julius Caesar at Gergovia (Bell. Gall. VII. xlv. 2). Bannockburn has been cited as a modern instance.

it chanced that a Gaul attempted to drive off certain sumpter animals that were grazing outside of the stockade, and two Roman soldiers took them away from him. These men were stoned by the Gauls. Whereupon a shout arose in the Roman outpost, and men ran forward on both sides. And now the mellay was likely to end in a regular battle, had not the centurions speedily parted the combatants. Sulpicius was assured by this incident that Tullius spoke truth, and, the situation admitting of no delay, he announced a general engagement for the morrow.

B.C.
359-358

Yet the dictator was entering a struggle in which he relied more on the spirit of his troops than on their strength. He began therefore to cast about and every way to consider how he might strike terror into the enemy by some stratagem. His cleverness produced a new expedient, which many generals both of our own and foreign countries—some even in the present age—have since employed.¹ Commanding the muleteers to remove the pack-saddles from the mules, leaving only a pair of saddle-cloths on each, and arming them, partly with captured weapons, partly with those belonging to the sick, he mounted them. Having in this way made out near a thousand, he mixed a hundred cavalymen with them and ordered them to go up by night on to the mountains above the camp and conceal themselves in the woods, and not to stir from thence until they received a signal from him. The dictator himself, as soon as it was light, began to deploy his front along the lower slopes, on purpose to make the enemy take their stand facing the mountains where the preparations had been made for inspiring them with a fear which, groundless veris viribus profuit. Primo credere duces Gallorum non descensuros in acquum Romanos; deinde, ubi degressos repente viderunt, et ipsi avidi certaminis in proelium ruunt, priusque pugna coepit quam signum ab ducibus daretur.

XV. Acrius invasere Galli dextro¹ cornu; neque sustineri potuissent, ni forte eo loco dictator fuisset.
 2 Sex. Tullium nomine increpans rogitansque sicine pugnatu-
 3 ros milites spon-
 4 disset? Ubi illi clamores sint arma poscentium, ubi minae iniussu imperatoris proelium inituros? En ipsum imperatorem clara voce vocare ad proelium et ire armatum ante prima signa; ecquis sequeretur eorum qui modo ducturi fuerint,
 5 in castris feroces, in acie pavidi? Vera audiebant; itaque tantos pudor stimulos admovit, ut ruerent in hostium tela alienatis a memoria periculi animis. Hic primo impetus prope vecors turbavit hostes,
 6 eques deinde emissus turbatos avertit. Ipse dictator post quam labantem una parte vidit aciem, signa in laevum cornu confert, quo turbam hostium congregari cernebat, et iis qui in monte erant signum quod
 7 convenerat dedit. Ubi inde quoque novus clamor

¹ dextro Drakenborch (cf. §§ 4 and 6): dextrum Ω .

though it was, yet served the Romans almost better than actual strength. At first the Gallic leaders supposed that the Romans would not come down into the plain; then, when they saw that they had suddenly begun to descend, they also, being themselves eager for the combat, rushed into battle, and the fighting began before the signal could be given by the generals.

XV. The right wing of the Gauls attacked fiercely, and it would have been impossible to stop them, if the dictator had not happened to be there. Calling out to Sextius Tullius by name, he chid him and asked if this was the kind of fighting he had promised that the men should do. Where were those shouts with which they had called for arms? Where were their threats that they would begin the battle without the general's orders? Here was their general himself, who with a loud voice summoned them to fight, and advanced, sword in hand, in the very van! Of those who but now were ready to lead, was there none to follow? They might swagger in camp; in the field they were arrant cowards. What he said was the truth, and so stung them with shame that they rushed on the weapons of the enemy in utter forgetfulness of danger. This well-nigh frenzied onset first threw their enemies into disarray, and before they could recover their confusion the cavalry charged and routed them. The dictator himself, as soon as he saw that a part of their line was wavering, turned the infantry attack against their left, where he descried a throng of the enemy gathering, and made the appointed signal to those on the mountain. And when they too raised a shout and were seen to

A.U.C.
395-396

- ortus est¹ et tendere obliquo monte ad castra Gallorum visi sunt, tum metu ne excluderentur omissa pugna est cursuque effuso ad castra ferebantur.
- 6 Ubi cum occurrisset eis M. Valerius magister equitum, qui profligato dextro² cornu obequitabat hostium
- 7 munimentis, ad montes silvasque vertunt fugam plurimique ibi a fallaci equitum specie agasonibusque excepti sunt; et eorum quos pavor pertulerat³ in silvas atrox caedes post sedatum proelium fuit.
- 8 Nec alius post M. Furium quam C. Sulpicius iustiorum de Gallis egit triumphum. Auri quoque ex Gallicis spoliis satis magnum pondus saxo quadrato saeptum in Capitolio sacravit.
- 9 Eodem anno et a consulibus vario eventu bellatum; nam Hernici a C. Plautio devicti subactique sunt. Fabius collega eius incaute atque inconsulte adversus
- 10 Tarquinienses pugnavit. Nec in acie tantum ibi cladis acceptum quam quod trecentos septem milites Romanos captos Tarquinienses immolarunt, qua foeditate supplicii aliquanto ignominia populi Romani
- 11 insignitior fuit. Accessit ad eam cladem et vastatio Romani agri, quam Privernates, Veliterni deinde, incursione repentina fecerunt.
- 12 Eodem anno duae tribus, Pomptina et Publilia,

¹ ortus est Lutembacher: ortus (hort' H) Ω.

² dextro Ω: sinistro Glareanus.

³ pertulerat D³5: perculerat Ω.

¹ Bringing up the total number at this time to twenty-seven.

be moving obliquely down the mountain in the direction of the Gallic camp, the enemy, fearing to be shut out, ceased fighting and rushed pell-mell for their entrenchments. There however they were met by Marcus Valerius, the master of the horse, who, having scattered the enemy's right wing, was then riding up to their works; whereupon they turned and fled towards the mountains and the woods, where very many of them were intercepted by the muleteers masquerading as cavalry; and those whose fright had carried them into the woods were pitilessly slaughtered, after the battle had died down. Not since the time of Marcus Furius has anyone celebrated a Gallic triumph that was better deserved than that of Gaius Sulpicius. He also collected from the spoils a considerable weight of gold, which he walled up with hewn stone in the Capitol, and so dedicated.

B.C.
359-358

In the same year the consuls, too, waged war with varying success. Gaius Plautius defeated the Hernici and reduced them to subjection; his colleague Fabius showed neither prudence nor skill in his battle with the Tarquinienses. And yet the disaster experienced on the field was overshadowed by the fact that the Tarquinienses slew three hundred and seven captured Roman soldiers as a sacrifice—an act of savage cruelty that greatly emphasized the humiliation of the Roman People. In addition to this defeat, the Romans suffered the devastation of their fields in sudden incursions made by the Privernates, and afterwards by the Veliterni.

In the same year two tribes were added;¹ the Pomptine and the Publilian; the votive games, additae; ludi votivi, quos M. Furius dictator voverat, facti; et de ambitu ab C. Poetelio¹ tribuno plebis auctoribus patribus tum primum ad populum latum est; eaque rogatione novorum maxime hominum ambitionem, qui nundinas et conciliabula obire soliti erant, compressam credebant.

A.U.C.
395-396

A.U.C.
397

XVI. Haud aequae laeta patribus insequenti anno C. Marcio Cn. Manlio consulibus de unciario fenore a M. Duillio² L. Menenio tribunis plebis rogatio est perlata; et plebs aliquanto eam cupidius scivit.³

2 Ad bella nova priore anno destinata Falisci quoque hostes exorti duplici crimine, quod et cum Tarquiniensibus iuventus eorum militaverat et eos qui Falerios perfugerant cum male pugnatum est, repetentibus 3 fetialibus Romanis non reddiderant. Ea provincia Cn. Manlio obvenit. Marcius exercitum in agrum Privernatem, integrum pace longinqua, induxit militumque praeda implevit. Ad copiam rerum addidit munificentiam, quod nihil in publicum secernendo 4 augenti⁴ rem privatam militi favit. Privernates cum ante moenia sua castris permunitis consedisent, vocatis ad contionem militibus "Castra nunc" inquit "vobis hostium urbemque praedae do, si mihi polli-

¹ Poetelio C.I.L. i², pp. 126, 130: poetilio (or petilio) Ω .

² Duillio edd.: duilio (and other corruptions) Ω .

³ scivit Weissenborn and Madvig: sciuit accepit M: sciuit accepitque (or accepi- or accepti-) Ω .

⁴ augenti ς : augendi (wanting in O) Ω .

¹ Tacitus tells us (Annals vi. xvi.) that the twelve Tables had forbidden a higher rate of interest. If so, the tribunes were merely reviving an obsolete enactment. Unciarius fenus—interest at the rate of $\frac{1}{12}$ of 1 for each 100 of the principal sum, calculated monthly, hence 1 per cent. annually.

which Marcus Furius had vowed as dictator, were given; and a statute against bribery was then for the first time laid before the people by Gaius Poetelius, tribune of the plebs, with the approbation of the senate. By this measure they thought to have suppressed corrupt practices, particularly on the part of men risen from the people, who were wont to haunt the country fairs and gathering-places.

XVI. Less agreeable to the senate was a measure which came up in the following year, in the consulship of Gaius Marcius and Gnaeus Manlius. It fixed the rate of interest at one per cent., and was carried through by Marcus Duillius and Lucius Menenius, tribunes of the plebs. The commons ratified it much more eagerly than they had done the other law.¹

Besides the new wars determined on in the previous year, the Faliscans also rose up as enemies. They were charged with two offences: their youth had fought on the side of the Tarquinienses; and they had refused the demand of the fetials that they should give up the Romans who had taken refuge in Falerii, after the defeat. This command was assigned to Gnaeus Manlius. Marcius led an army into the territory of Privernum, unravaged during a long period of peace, and loaded his troops with booty. This abundance he administered bountifully, and sequestering nothing to the public treasury, encouraged the men to augment their private fortunes. The Privernates having encamped in front of their town, within strong intrenchments, Marcius called his soldiers together and thus addressed them: "I give you now for booty the camp and city of our enemies, if you promise me

B.C.
359-358

B.C. 357

A.U.C.
397

- cemini vos fortiter in acie operam navaturos nec
 5 praedae magis quam pugnae paratos esse." Signum poscunt ingenti clamore celsique et spe haud dubia feroces in proelium vadunt. Ibi ante signa Sex.
 Tullius, de quo ante dictum est, exclamat "Aspice, imperator" inquit, "quemadmodum exercitus tuus
 tibi promissa praestet," piloque posito stricto gladio 6 in hostem impetum facit. Sequuntur Tullium ante-signani omnes primoque impetu avertere hostem;
 fusum inde ad oppidum persecuti, cum iam scalas moenibus admoverent, in deditionem urbem acceperunt. Triumphus de Privernatibus actus.
 7 Ab altero consule nihil memorabile gestum, nisi quod legem novo exemplo ad Sutrium in castris tributim de vicensima eorum qui manumitterentur tulit. Patres, quia ea lege haud parvum vectigal 8 inopi aerario additum esset, auctores fuerunt; ceterum tribuni plebis, non tam lege quam exemplo moti, ne
 quis postea populum sevocaret, capite sanxerunt;
 nihil enim non per milites iuratos in consulis verba, quamvis perniciosum populo, si id liceret, ferri posse.
 9 Eodem anno C. Licinius Stolo a M. Popilio Laenate sua lege decem milibus aeris est damnatus, quod mille iugerum agri cum filio possideret emancupandoque filium fraudem legi fecisset.

¹ Within a distance of one mile from the walls a citizen might appeal from the decision of a consul, but beyond that point the consul's authority was absolute.

² From his paternal authority.

³ By the Licinio-Sextian legislation of 377 it had been forbidden that anybody should hold more than 500 iugera. cf. VI. xxxv. 5.

that in the battle you will play the part of men, B.C. 357 and be not more ready to plunder than to fight." They clamoured loudly for the signal and entered the battle with spirit, emboldened by no uncertain expectations. There in the fore-front Sextus Tullius, who has been mentioned before, cried out, "Look, general, and see how your army keeps the promises it gave you!" Then, laying down his javelin, he drew his sword and charged the foe. All of the front line followed Tullius, and putting the enemy to flight at the first shock, pursued them to the town, where the Romans were already bringing up their scaling ladders to the wall, when the place surrendered. A triumph was celebrated over the Privernates.

The other consul accomplished nothing worth recording, except that without precedent he got a law passed in his camp before Sutrium—the men voting by tribes—which levied a tax of one-twentieth on manumissions. The Fathers ratified this law, since it brought in no small revenue to the empty treasury; but the tribunes of the plebs, troubled less by the law than by the precedent established, had it made a capital offence for anyone thereafter to summon the people to the comitia away from Rome. If this should be permitted, there was nothing, they argued, however baneful to the people, which could not be carried through by the votes of soldiers sworn to obey their consul.¹

In the same year Gaius Licinius Stolo was prosecuted under his own statute by Marcus Popilius Laenas, and condemned to pay a fine of ten thousand asses, on the charge that he held with his son a thousand iugera of land, and by emancipating his son² had evaded the law.³

XVII. Novi consules inde, M. Fabius Ambustus
 2 iterum et M. Popilius Laenas iterum, duo bella habuere, facile alterum cum Tiburtibus, quod Laenas gessit, qui hoste in urbem compulso agros vastavit;
 Falisci Tarquiniensesque alterum consulem prima 3 pugna fuderunt. Inde terror maximus fuit quod sacerdotes eorum facibus ardentibus anguibusque praelatis incessu furiali militem Romanum insueta turbaverunt specie. Et tum quidem velut lymphati et attoniti munimentis suis trepido agmine inci-4 derunt; deinde, ubi consul legatique ac tribuni puerorum ritu vana miracula paventes inridebant increpabantque, vertit animos repente pudor, et in 5 ca ipsa quae fugerant velut caeci ruebant. Discusso itaque vano apparatu hostium cum in ipsos armatos
 se intulissent, averterunt totam aciem; castrisque etiam eo die potiti praeda ingenti parta victores
 reverterunt, militaribus iocis cum apparatus hostium 6 tum suum increpantes pavorem. Concitatur deinde omne nomen Etruscum, et Tarquiniensibus Faliscisque ducibus ad Salinas perveniunt. Adversus eum terro-rem dictator C. Marcius Rutulus¹ primus de plebe dictus magistrum equitum item de plebe C. Plau-7 tium dixit. Id vero patribus indignum videri, etiam dictaturam iam in promiscuo esse; omnique ope

¹ Rutulus Conway (cf. chap. xxxviii. § 8 and Conway's note at III. vii. 6): rutilius *LHA*²; utilius (omitted by O) Ω.

BOOK VII. xvii. 1-7

XVII. New consuls now came in, Marcus Fabius Ambustus and Marcus Popilius Laenas, each for the second time. They had two wars. One of these was easy; it was waged by Laenas against the Tiburtes, and he shut up the enemy within their city and pillaged their fields. The other consul was routed by the Faliscans and Tarquinienses in his first engagement. The panic was chiefly due to this, that their priests, bearing serpents and blazing torches before them, came rushing on like Furies, and utterly dismayed the Roman soldiers with the extraordinary sight. At first they were like men frantic and distraught, and flung themselves in a disordered mob into their own works. Then when the consul, the lieutenants and the tribunes laughed at them and upbraided them for being scared like children at idle tricks, shame caused a sudden revulsion in their feelings, and they rushed, as if blinded, on the very objects from which they had fled. In this spirit they brushed aside the enemy's vain paraphernalia, and hurling themselves on his real fighting men, they routed the whole army, and even captured the camp that day. As they returned victorious with the rich plunder they had won, they jested in soldier-fashion and scoffed not only at the enemy's devices but at their own fright as well. All who bore the Etruscan name then rose in arms, and led by the men of Tarquinii and Falerii, advanced as far as Salinae. To meet this fearful danger Gaius Marcius Rutulus was made dictator, the first that was ever appointed from the plebs, and he named a plebeian also, Gaius Plautius, to be master of the horse. But the patricians thought it shameful that even the dictatorship should now

B.C.
356-355

A.U.C.
398-399

- impediebant ne quid dictatori ad id bellum decerneretur parareturve. Eo promptius cuncta ferente
 8 dictatore populus iussit. Profectus ab urbe utraque parte Tiberis, ratibus exercitu, quocumque fama hostium ducebat, traiecto multos populatores agrorum
 9 vagos palantes oppressit; castra quoque necopinato adgressus cepit et octo milibus hostium captis, ceteris aut caesis aut ex agro Romano fugatis sine auctoritate patrum populi iussu triumphavit.
- 10 Quia nec per dictatorem plebeium nec per consulem comitia consularia haberi volebant et alter consul Fabius bello retinebatur, res ad interregnum
 11 redit. Interreges deinceps Q. Servilius Ahala M. Fabius Cn. Manlius C. Fabius C. Sulpicius L. Aemilius Q. Servilius M. Fabius Ambustus. In secundo
 12 interregno orta contentio est, quod duo patricii consules creabantur, intercedentibusque tribunis interrex Fabius aiebat in duodecim tabulis legem esse ut quodcumque postremum populus iussisset, id ius ratumque esset; iussum populi et suffragia esse.
- 13 Cum intercedendo tribuni nihil aliud quam ut different comitia valuissent, duo patricii consules creati sunt, C. Sulpicius Peticus tertium M. Valerius Publicola, eodemque die magistratum inierunt, (XVIII.)

A.U.C.
100

¹ Compare the story of Valerius and Horatius at III. lxiii. 11.

² Perhaps identical with the M. Fabius Ambustus of VI. xxii., xxxiv., xxxvi.: perhaps with the M. Fabius Dorsuo of VII. xxviii.

BOOK VII. XVII. 7-13

be common; and they exerted all their influence to prevent anything being decreed or made ready for the dictator, to carry on that war. For which reason the people voted the more promptly everything that the dictator proposed. Marching out from the City and setting his army across the Tiber by means of rafts, wherever a rumour of the enemy called him, he surprised many straggling pillagers as they roamed about the fields, on both sides of the river; he also captured their camp in a surprise attack, and with it eight thousand soldiers; and having slain the rest, or driven them out of Roman territory, was granted a triumph by the people, but without the authorization of the senate.¹

The patricians were not willing that a consular election should be held by a plebeian, whether dictator or consul, and the other consul being detained by the war, the state relapsed into an interregnum. The office of interrex was held successively by Quintus Servilius Ahala, Marcus Fabius,² Gnaeus Manlius, Gaius Fabius, Gaius Sulpicius, Lucius Aemilius, Quintus Servilius, and Marcus Fabius Ambustus. In the second interregnum a controversy arose because two patricians were on the point of being named as consuls; and when the tribunes sought to veto the announcement, the interrex Fabius declared that the Twelve Tables enacted that whatsoever the people decreed last should have the binding force of law, and their votes were also a decree. The tribunes gained nothing more by their intervention than a postponement of the comitia, and two patrician consuls were elected, namely Gaius Sulpicius Peticius (for the third time) and Marcus Valerius Publicola. They entered office that very day, (XVIII.

B.C.
356-355

B.C. 354

A.U.C.
400

- quadringentesimo anno quam urbs Romana condita erat, quinto tricesimo quam a Gallis recuperata, ablato post undecimum¹ annum a plebe consulatu.²
- 2 Empulum³ eo anno ex Tiburtibus haud memorando certamine captum, sive duorum consulum auspicio bellum ibi gestum est, ut scripsere quidam, seu per idem tempus Tarquiniensium quoque sunt vastati agri ab Sulpicio consule, quo Valerius adversus Tiburtes legiones duxit.
- 3 Domi maius certamen consulibus cum plebe ac tribunis erat. Fidei iam suae non solum virtutis ducebant esse, ut accepissent duo patricii consulatum, ita ambobus patriciis mandare: quin aut toto cedendum esse, ut⁴ plebeius iam magistratus consulatus fiat, aut totum possidendum quam possessionem
- 5 integram a patribus accepissent. Plebes contra fremit: quid se vivere, quid in parte civium censi, si, quod duorum hominum virtute, L. Sexti ac C. Licini, partum sit, id obtinere universi non possint?
- 6 Vel reges vel decemviros vel si quod tristius sit imperii nomen patiendum esse potius, quam ambos
- 7 patricios consules videant, nec in vicem pareatur atque imperetur, sed pars altera in aeterno imperio locata plebem nusquam alio natam quam ad servium
- 8 endum putet. Non desunt tribuni auctores turbarum, sed inter concitatos per se omnes vix duces eminent.

¹ undecimum Sigonius and Glareanus: nonum (or some corruption of nonum) Ω.

² consulatu Walters and Conway: consulatu patricii consules ambo ex interregno magistratum iniere, C. Sulpicius Peticus tertium M. Valerius Publicola Ω.

³ Empulum ξ: emaepulum (and other corruptions) Ω.

⁴ esse ut Madvig: esset si (est si DL) Ω.

in the four hundredth year from the founding of Rome B.C. 354
 and the thirty-fifth from its recovery from the Gauls, depriving the plebs of the consulship they had enjoyed for ten years. Empulum was won that year from the Tiburtes without any memorable battle being fought; whether, as some writers state, the campaign was conducted there under the auspices of the two consuls; or whether the lands belonging to Tarquinii were ravaged by the consul Sulpicius at the same time that Valerius led his legions against the Tiburtes.

The consuls had a harder struggle at home, with the plebs and the tribunes. They held that honour as well as courage required of them that, even as two patricians had received the consulship, so they should hand it over to successors who were both patricians:
 indeed they ought rather to withdraw from the consulship altogether, that it might at once become a plebeian magistracy, or else retain undivided that control which they had inherited entire from their fathers. On the other side, the plebeians were asking angrily why they lived, why they were counted a part of the state, if they were unable by their collective efforts to maintain what the courage of two men, Lucius Sextius and Gaius Licinius, had won for them.
 It were better to put up with kings or decemvirs, or —if possible— a more stern type of government than theirs, rather than see the consuls both patricians and have no turns at obeying and commanding, while a part of the people thought themselves established forever in authority and the commons born for no other end than servitude. There was no lack of tribunes to promote disturbances, but where all were so excited, to begin with, the leaders were hardly to

A.U.C.
400

9 Aliquotiens frustra in campum descensum cum esset multique per seditiones acti comitiales dies, postremo vicit¹ perseverantia consulum : plebis eo dolor erupit ut tribunos actum esse de libertate vociferantes relinquendumque non campum iam solum sed etiam urbem captam atque oppressam regno patriciorum
10 maesta² sequeretur. Consules relictī a parte populi per infrequentiam comitia nihilo segnus perficiunt. Creati consules ambo patricii, M. Fabius Ambustus tertium T. Quinctius. In quibusdam annalibus pro T. Quinctio M. Popilium consulem invenio.

A.U.C.
401

XIX. Duo bella eo anno prospere gesta. Cum Tarquiniensibus Tiburtibusque³ ad deditionem pugnatum. Sassula ex his urbs capta; ceteraque oppida eandem fortunam habuissent, ni universa gens positis
2 armis in fidem consulis venisset. Triumphatum de Tiburtibus; alioquin mitis victoria fuit. In Tarquinienses acerbē saevitum; multis mortalibus in acie caesis ex ingenti captivorum numero trecenti quinquaginta octo delecti, nobilissimus quisque, qui Roman
3 mitterentur; vulgus aliud trucidatum. Nec populus in eos qui missi Roman erant mitior fuit: medio in foro omnes virgis caesi ac securi percussi. Id pro immolatis in foro Tarquiniensium Romanis poenae

¹ vicit Conway: uicta (victa O) Ω; uictae ζ.

² maesta ζ (Alscheffski): maesta plebs Ω.

³ Tarquiniensibus Tiburtibusque Walters: Tarquiniensibus Tiburtibusque cum Tiburtibus Az: Tarquiniensibus Tiburtibusque cum Tiburtibus usque Fray. Haverk.: Tarquiniensibus Tiburtibusque usque coll. Gaertn.: Tiburtibus usque Madvig: Tiburtibusque Ω.

¹ Where the voting took place.

be discerned. After the people had several times gone down to the Campus Martius¹ to no purpose, and many meeting days had been spent in rioting, the persistence of the consuls finally prevailed. The plebs, thereupon, in a burst of resentment, followed their tribunes, who cried out that liberty was lost and that they ought now to leave not only the voting-field but the City, too, which was taken captive and enslaved by the tyranny of the patricians. The consuls, being deserted by half the people, nevertheless, despite the paucity of voters, completed the election. The successful candidates were both patricians, Marcus Fabius Ambustus (for the third time) and Titus Quinctius. In certain annals I find Marcus Popilius given as consul instead of Titus Quinctius.

B.C. 354

XIX. Two wars were successfully prosecuted this year, and the Tarquinienses and Tiburtes were forced to make submission. From the latter their city of Sassula was taken, and the rest of their towns would have met with the same fortune, had the whole nation not laid down their arms and cast themselves upon the mercy of the consul. A triumph was celebrated over them, but in all other respects the victory was used with clemency. The men of Tarquinii were shown no ruth; many were slain in the field of battle, and out of the vast number taken prisoners three hundred and fifty-eight were selected—the noblest of them all—to be sent to Rome, and the rest of the populace were put to the sword. Neither were the People less stern towards those who had been sent to Rome, but scourged them all with rods in the middle of the Forum and struck off their heads. Such was the vengeance they exacted of their enemies for the Romans sacrificed

B.C. 353

A.U.C.
401

4 hostibus redditum. Res bello bene gestae ut Samnites quoque amicitiam peterent effecerunt. Legatis eorum comiter ab senatu responsum; foedere in societatem accepti.

5 Non eadem domi quae militiae fortuna erat plebi Romanae. Nam etsi unciario fenore facto levata usura erat, sorte ipsa obruebantur inopes nexumque inibant; eo nec patricos ambo consules neque comitiorum curam publicave studia prae privatis incommodis plebs ad animum admittebat. Consulatus
6 uterque apud patricos manet; consules creati C. Sulpicius Peticus quartum M. Valerius Publicola iterum.

In bellum Etruscum intentam civitatem, quia Caeritem populum misericordia consanguinitatis Tarquiniensibus adiunctum fama ferebatur, legati Latini ad Volscos convertere, nuntiantes exercitum conscriptum armatumque iam suis finibus imminere; inde populabundos in agrum Romanum venturos
7 esse. Censuit igitur senatus neutram neglegendam rem esse; utroque legiones scribi consulesque sortiri
8 provincias iussit. Inclinauit deinde pars maior curae in Etruscum bellum, postquam litteris Sulpici con-

¹ Chap. xv. § 10.

in the market-place of Tarquinii.¹ Their success in B.C. 353 war induced the Samnites also to apply for their friendship. The senate made a courteous answer to their ambassadors, and granted them a treaty of alliance.

The Roman commons were not so fortunate at home as in the field. For notwithstanding they had been relieved of usury by the adoption of a one per cent.
rate, the very poor found even the principal sum a crushing burden, and were being bound over to their creditors. Hence it was that neither the incumbency of two patrician consuls, nor concern for the elections or affairs of state, could divert the thoughts of the plebeians from their personal distresses. Accordingly both consulships continued in the hands of the patricians; Gaius Sulpicius Peticus was elected for the fourth time, and Marcus Valerius Publicola for the second.

While the citizens were occupied with thoughts of an Etruscan war—for it was rumoured that the people of Caere, out of compassion for their kinsmen of Tarquinii, had made common cause with them—came envoys from the Latins and turned their thoughts upon the Volsci, with a report that they had mustered and equipped an army, which was even then descending upon Latium, from whence it would invade and devastate the territory of the Romans. The senate therefore resolved that neither threat must be neglected; and ordered that legions should be enrolled for both campaigns, and that the consuls should decide the commands by lot. But the Etruscan war afterwards came to be their chief concern, on the receipt of a dispatch from the consul Sulpicius, who had received the assignment

A.U.C.
401

- sulis, cui Tarquinii provincia evenerat, cognitum est depopulatum agrum circa Romanas salinas praedaeque partem in Caeritum fines avectam et haud dubie iuventutem eius populi inter praedatores fuisse.
- 9 Itaque Valerium consulem, Volscis oppositum castraque ad finem Tusculanum habentem, revocatum inde senatus dictatorem dicere iussit. T. Manlium
- 10 L. filium dixit. Is cum sibi magistrum equitum A. Cornelium Cossum dixisset, consulari exercitu contentus ex auctoritate patrum ac populi iussu Caeritibus bellum indixit.

XX. Tum primum Caerites, tamquam in verbis hostium vis maior ad bellum significandum quam in suis factis, qui per populationem Romanos lacessierant, esset, verus belli terror invasit, et quam non

2 suarum virium ea dimicatio esset cernebant; paenitebatque populationis et Tarquinienses execrabantur defectionis auctores; nec arma aut bellum quisquam apparare, sed pro se quisque legatos mitti iubebat

3 ad petendam erroris veniam. Legati senatum cum adissent, ab senatu reiecti ad populum deos rogaverunt, quorum sacra bello Gallico accepta rite procurassent, ut Romanos florentes ea sui misericordia caperet quae se rebus adfectis quondam populi

4 Romani cepisset; conversique ad delubra Vestae hospitium flaminum Vestaliumque ab se caste ac

¹ sc. Torquatus. See chap. v. § 3 and chap. x. § 13.

² See v. xl. 7 and l. 3.

to Tarquinii, with the news that the countryside lying near the Roman salt-works had been pillaged, and a part of the booty carried into the borders of the Caerites, whose soldiers had, without question, been amongst the depredators. And so the senate recalled Valerius the consul, who was opposing the Volsci and had his camp close to the Tusculan frontier, and ordered him to nominate a dictator. His choice fell upon Titus Manlius,¹ the son of Lucius, who appointed as master of the horse Aulus Cornelius Cossus. Asking for no more than the consular army, the dictator, by the senate's authority, and at the bidding of the people, proclaimed war on the Caerites.

XX. It was then that the Caerites realized for the first time the full danger of war, as if the words of their enemies conveyed a more emphatic hint of it than their own acts, though they had pillaged the Romans and harried them. Beginning then to perceive how inadequate was their strength to such a quarrel, they repented of their raid, and cursed the Tarquinienses, who had encouraged them to fall away. Nobody made ready his arms and prepared for war, but one and all bade dispatch ambassadors to Rome, to beg forgiveness for their error. The envoys, having approached the senate, were sent by them to be dealt with by the people. Calling on the gods whose sacred emblems they had received and religiously protected in the Gallic war, they besought them to inspire the Romans in their prosperity with such compassion for the men of Caere as they themselves had formerly shown for Rome in her time of tribulation.² Then, turning to the shrine of Vesta, they invoked the flamens and Vestals whom they had

A.U.C.
401

5 religiose cultum invocabant: eane meritos crederet quisquam hostes repente sine causa factos? aut, si quid hostiliter fecissent, consilio id magis quam furore lapsos fecisse, ut sua vetera beneficia, locata praesertim apud tam gratos, novis corrumpent maleficiis, florentemque populum Romanum ac feli-cissimum bello sibi desumerent hostem, cuius adflicti
 amicitiam petissent?¹ Ne appellarent consilium quae 6 vis ac necessitas appellanda esset. Transeuntes² agmine infesto per agrum suum Tarquinienses, cum praeter viam nihil petissent, traxisse quosdam agrestium populationis eius, quae sibi crimini detur, 7 comites. Eos seu dedi placeat, dedere se paratos esse, seu supplicio adfici, daturus poenas. Caere, sacrarium populi Romani, deversorium sacerdotum ac receptaculum Romanorum sacrorum, intactum inviolatumque crimine belli hospitio Vestalium cultisque 8 dis darent. Movit populum non tam causa praesens quam vetus meritum, ut maleficii quam beneficii potius immemores essent. Itaque pax populo Caeriti data, indutiasque in centum annos factas in aes³

¹ petissent M: cepissent Ω: coepissent HTD: . . pis-sent O.

² transeuntes *A*¹ or *A*²: tanseuntes II: transeuntis PFTDLA: transeundis M: wanting in O.

³ aes Madvig: senatus consultum (sē) Ω, entertained with a pure and scrupulous hospitality. B.C. 353

Could anyone, they asked, believe that those who had deserved so well of the Romans had suddenly turned enemies without reason? or that if they had in fact committed an act of hostility, it had been deliberately planned, and had not rather been owing to a fit of madness? Would they undo their own kindness of old, especially kindness to such grateful friends, with new misdeeds; and choose to be enemies of the Roman People in their flourishing state and at the height of their success in war, when they had sought their friendship in the hour of their adversity? Let them not give the name of "purpose" to what should properly be called "force" and "necessity." The Tarquinienses, marching in hostile array through their territories, had sought nothing of them save permission to pass, but had drawn certain rustics after them in their train, who had borne a part in the pillaging with which the people of Caere were now taxed. If it pleased the Romans that these men should be surrendered, they would surrender them; if they would have them punished, they should be made to suffer. But Caere, the sanctuary of the Roman People, the hostel of its priests and refuge of the Roman religion, let them preserve intact and unstained by the imputation of making war, for the sake of the hospitality it had shown their Vestals and the reverence it had paid their gods. The people were moved, not so much by their present claims as by their ancient merits, and chose rather to forget an injury than a kindness. So peace was granted to the people of Caere, and it was resolved that a truce of a hundred years be made, and recorded on a table of bronze. The 9 referri placuit. In Faliscos eodem noxios crimine vis belli conversa est; sed hostes nusquam inventi. Cum populatione peragrati fines essent, ab oppugnatione urbium temperatum; legionibusque Romam reductis reliquum anni muris turribusque reficiendis consumptum et aedis Apollinis dedicata est.

A.U.C.
401

A.U.C.
402

XXI. Extremo anno comitia consularia certamen patrum ac plebis diremit, tribunis negantibus passuros comitia haberi ni secundum Liciniam legem haberentur, dictatore obstinato tollere potius totum e re publica consulatum quam promiscuum patribus
2 ac plebi facere. Prolatandis igitur comitiis cum dictator magistratu abisset, res ad interregnum rediit. Infestam inde patribus plebem interreges cum accepissent, ad undecimum interregem seditioni-
3 bus certatum est. Legis Liciniae patrocinium tribuni iactabant; propior dolor plebi fenoris ingravescentis erat, curaeque privatae in certaminibus publicis
4 erumpebant. Quorum¹ taedio patres L. Cornelium Scipionem interregem concordiae causa observare legem Liciniam comitiis consularibus iussere. P. Valerio Publicolae datus e plebe collega C. Marcius
5 Rutulus.² Inclinatorum semel in concordiam animis novi consules fenebrem quoque rem, quae distinere

¹ quorum *O*5: quarum Ω.

² Rutulus Conway: rutilius Ω.

¹ Brother of the Marcus Valerius of chap. xxiii. § 3.

brunt of the war was turned against the Faliscans, B.C. 353 who lay under the same accusation; but the enemy were nowhere encountered. Having ranged over their lands and laid them waste, the Romans refrained from attacking their cities, and led their legions home. The rest of the year was consumed in repairing the walls and towers, and a temple was dedicated to Apollo.

XXI. In the latter part of the year the consular B.C. 352 election was broken off by a quarrel between the patricians and the plebs: the tribunes refused to permit the assembly to be held unless it were held agreeably to the Licinian law, and the dictator was obstinately determined rather to remove the consulship root and branch out of the state than to throw it open to patricians and plebs without distinction. The assembly was therefore repeatedly adjourned, until the dictator's term had expired, and the state reverted to an interregnum. The interreges found the commons hostile to the patricians, and the factional struggle continued until there had been eleven interreges. The tribunes continually vaunted their backing of the Licinian law: the plebs were more concerned with the distress they suffered from the increasing weight of usury, and their private worries broke out into public quarrels. Worn out with these, the senate ordered Lucius Cornelius Scipio, the interrex, for harmony's sake to observe the Licinian law at the consular election. Publius Valerius Publicola¹ was elected, with a plebeian colleague named Gaius Marcius Rutulus. Now that the minds of men were once inclined to concord, the new consuls set themselves to obtain relief in the matter of usury also, which appeared to be the sole una animos¹ videbatur, levare adgressi solutionem alieni aeris in publicam curam verterunt quinqueviris creatis quos mensarios ab dispensatione pecuniae 6 appellarunt. Meriti aequitate curaque sunt, ut per omnium annalium monumenta celebres nominibus essent; fuere autem C. Duillius² P. Decius Mus 7 M. Papirius Q. Publilius³ et T. Aemilius. Qui rem difficillimam tractatu et plerumque parti utrique, semper certe alteri gravem cum alia moderatione tum impendio magis publico quam iactura sustinuerunt. 8 Tarda enim nomina et impeditiora inertia debitorum quam facultatibus aut aerarium mensis cum aere in foro positis dissolvit, ut populo prius caveretur, aut aestimatio aequis rerum pretiis liberavit, ut non modo sine iniuria sed etiam sine querimoniis partis utriusque exhausta vis ingens aeris alieni sit.

A.U.C.
402

A.U.C.
403

9 Terror inde vanus belli Etrusci, cum coniurasse duodecim populos fama esset, dictatorem dici coegit. Dictus in castris—eo enim ad consules missum senatus consultum est—C. Iulius, cui magister equitum adiectus L. Aemilius. Ceterum foris tranquilla omnia fuere: (XXII.) temptatum domi per dictatorem ut ambo patricii consules crearentur rem 2 ad interregnum perduxit. Duo interreges C. Sulpi-

¹ una animos 5 Jenicke: unanimos Ω: in animos D²A.

² Duillius A^z: duellius Ω.

³ Publilius Glareanus: publus Ω.

obstacle to harmony. They made the discharge of B.C. 352 debts a concern of the state, appointing five commissioners, whom they called bankers, from their having the disposition of the money. These men by their impartiality and diligence fairly earned the distinction which attaches, in all the histories, to the names of Gaius Duillius, Publius Decius Mus, Marcus Papirius, Quintus Publilius, and Titus Aemilius. In the discharge of a very difficult duty, involving always a hardship for one of the parties, and in most instances for both, they managed matters wisely in other respects, and, in particular, they expended without throwing away the public funds. For with long-standing accounts, embarrassed more by the debtors' neglect than by their lack of means, they dealt in one of the following ways: either they paid them out of the treasury—taking security for the people first—at the banking tables they had set up in the Forum; or they settled them upon a valuation, at fair prices, of the debtor's effects. And so, not only without injustice, but even without complaint from either side, a vast amount of indebtedness was cleared off.

A groundless fear of war with Etruria, on a report that the twelve nations had conspired, compelled the appointment of a dictator. The appointment was made in camp—for thither had the resolution of the senate been sent to the consuls—and Gaius Julius became dictator, with Lucius Aemilius for master of the horse. But abroad all was serene, B.C. 351 (XXII.) while at home an attempt, made through the dictator, to obtain the return of patricians to both consulships, brought the state to an interregnum. The two interreges who were put in, Gaius Sulpicius

cuius et M. Fabius interpositi obtinere, quod dictator frustra tetenderat, mitiore iam plebe ob recens meritum levati aeris alieni, ut ambo patricii consules 3 crearentur. Creati ipse C. Sulpicius Peticus, qui prior interregno abiit, et T. Quinctius Poenus; quidam Caesonem, alii Gaium praenomen ¹ Quinctio
 4 adiciunt. Ad bellum ambo profecti, Faliscum Quinctius, Sulpicius Tarquiniense, nusquam acie congresso hoste cum agris magis quam cum hominibus urendo
 5 populandoque gesserunt bella; cuius lentae velut tabis senio victa utriusque pertinacia populi est, ut primum a consulibus, dein permissu eorum ab senatu
 6 indutias peterent. In quadraginta annos impetraverunt.

Ita posita duorum bellorum quae imminebant cura, dum aliqua ab armis quies esset, quia solutio aeris alieni multarum rerum mutaverat dominos,
 7 censum agi placuit. Ceterum cum censoribus creandis indicta comitia essent, professus censuram se petere C. Marcius Rutulus,² qui primus dictator de plebe
 8 fuerat, concordiam ordinum turbavit; quod videbatur quidem tempore alieno fecisse, quia ambo tum forte patricii consules erant, qui rationem eius se
 9 habituros negabant; sed et ipse constantia inceptum obtinuit et tribuni omni vi, ut reciperaturi ³ ius con-

¹ Gaium praenomen (i. e. $\bar{\epsilon}\pi\eta\mu\epsilon\eta$) Walters: cognomen Ω : c. cognomen Gelenius ("vetus lectio"): C. nomen Sigonius (Diod. xvi. liii. 1, has Γάρος).

² Rutulus Conway: rutilius Ω .

³ vi ut reciperaturi Conway: vi reciperaturi Weissenborn: ui reciperantur M: ui recuperandos O: ui reci (or -cu-) perando Ω : ui recuperatū *A*²: vi ut reciperaretur Alschevski.

and Marcus Fabius, brought to pass what the B.C. 351 dictator had vainly striven for; and the plebs being now grown more tractable, thanks to the help lately granted them in the relief of debt, both men elected consuls were patricians. These were that very Gaius Sulpicius Peticus, who was the earlier of the two interreges, and Titus Quinctius Poenus. (Some give Caeso, others Gaius, as the praenomen of Quinctius.) Both marched out to fight, Quinctius against the Faliscans, Sulpicius against the Tarquinians; but nowhere encountering their enemies in battle, they warred rather with the land, which they burnt and pillaged, than with men; until the obstinacy of both peoples was overcome, as by the wasting of a lingering illness, and they requested a truce, first of the consuls, and later, by their permission, of the senate. They were granted one for forty years.

The anxiety arising from two threatening wars being thus allayed, it was resolved that while there was some rest from arms they would take the census; for the settlement of debts had brought about the change of ownership in many properties. But when notice had been given of an assembly for the election of censors, an announcement that he should be a candidate on the part of Gaius Marcius Rutulus, who had been the first plebeian dictator, played havoc with the harmony of the orders; for he seemed to have taken this step at an untoward time, since both the consuls, as it fell out, were then patricians, who declared that they would receive no votes for him; but Rutulus himself held firmly to his purpose, and the tribunes aided him with all their power, in the hope of resularibus comitiis amissum, adiuverunt, et cum ipsius viri maiestas nullius honoris fastigium non aequabat, tum per eundem qui ad dictaturam aperuisset viam censuram quoque in partem vocari plebes volebat.

A. U. C.
403

- 10 Nec variatum comitiis est, quin cum Manlio Naevio censor Marcius¹ crearetur.

Dictatorem quoque hic annus habuit M. Fabium nullo terrore belli, sed ne Licinia lex comitiis consularibus observaretur. Magister equitum dictatori

A. U. C.
404

- 11 additus Q. Servilius. Nec tamen dictatura potentio-torem eum consensum² patrum consularibus comitiis fecit, quam censoriis³ fuerat. XXIII. M. Popilius Laenas a plebe consul, a patribus L. Cornelius Scipio datus.

- Fortuna quoque inlustriorem plebeium consulem 2 fecit; nam cum ingentem Gallorum exercitum in agro Latino castra posuisse nuntiatum esset, Scipione gravi morbo implicito Gallicum bellum Popilio extra 3 ordinem datum. Is impigre exercitu scripto, cum omnes extra portam Capenam ad Martis aedem convenire armatos iuniores iussisset signaque eodem quaestores ex aerario deferre, quattuor expletis legionibus quod superfuit militum P. Valerio Publi-4 colae praetori tradidit, auctor⁴ patribus scribendi

¹ Naevio (or neuio or ne uio or le uio or naebio or enaebio) Ω . The names are evidently corrupted: Walters thinks Livy wrote cum Cn. Manlio T. f. C. Marcius crearetur.

² consensum ς : consensu Ω : wanting in O.

covering what they had lost in the election of consuls; and not only was the man's own greatness equal to any honour, however lofty, but the plebs desired that they might be called to share the censorship by the same man who had opened up for them a path to the dictatorship. There was no dissenting opinion shown at the assembly, and Marcius was elected, along with Manlius Naevius. B.C. 351

There was a dictator in this year also, namely, Marcus Fabius, not because of any threatened war, but to prevent the observance of the Licinian law in the consular election. Quintus Servilius was assigned to the dictator as master of the horse. But the dictatorship made the unanimity of the patricians no more potent in the election of consuls than it had been in the election of censors. XXIII. B.C. 350
 Marcus Popilius Laenas was chosen from the plebs, Lucius Cornelius Scipio from the patricians.

Fortune even made the plebeian consul the more illustrious, for the news that a huge army of Gauls had encamped in Latium found Scipio afflicted with a grave disorder, and the conduct of the war was entrusted by special arrangement to Popilius. He levied troops with energy, and ordered all the young men to assemble under arms outside the Porta Capena, at the temple of Mars, commanding the quaestors to convey the standards thither, from the treasury. After filling up four legions, he turned over the supernumeraries to the praetor, Publius Valerius Publicola, urging the senators to enroll

³ censoriis ζ: censor'is HT: censor'is Ω: wanting in O.

⁴ auctor Ω: auctori ζ Alschefski: auctoribus ζ.

A.U.C.
404

alterius exercitus, quod ad incertos belli eventus
 5 subsidium rei publicae esset. Ipse iam satis omnibus instructis comparatisque ad hostem pergit. Cuius ut prius nosceret vires quam periculo ultimo temptaret, in tumulo quem proximum castris Gallorum capere 6 potuit vallum ducere coepit. Gens ferox et ingenii avidi ad pugnam cum procul visis Romanorum signis
 ut extemplo proelium initura explicuisset aciem, postquam neque in aequum demitti ¹ agmen vidit et cum loci altitudine tum vallo etiam tegi Romanos, percussos pavore rata, simul opportuniores quod in-tenti tum maxime operi essent, truci clamore ad-7 greditur. Ab Romanis nec opus intermissum—triarii erant qui muniebant – et ab hastatis principibusque, qui pro munitoribus intenti armatique steterant,² 8 proelium initum. Praeter virtutem locus quoque superior adiuvit, ut pila omnia hastaeque non tamquam ex aequo missa vana, quod plerumque fit,
 caderent, sed omnia librata ponderibus figerentur;
 9 oneratique telis Galli, quibus aut corpora transfixa aut praegravata inhaerentibus gerebant scuta, cum cursu paene in adversum subissent, primo incerti 10 resistere; dein, cum ipsa cunctatio et his animos
 minuisset et auxisset hosti, impulsus retro ruere alii

¹ demitti Sigonius: dimitti Ω .² steterant ς : steterunt Ω : steterit H.

a second army as a national reserve against the uncertain emergencies of war. Having at length concluded all the necessary preparations, he himself marched against the enemy; and that he might first learn their strength before putting it to the test of a decisive battle, he seized and began to fortify an eminence as close as he could find to the camp of the Gauls. These, being a fierce people and by nature eager for the combat, on beholding the Roman ensigns in the distance, at once drew out their line, as if for instant battle. But perceiving that the Romans did not descend into the plain, but sought to protect themselves not only by their position but even with a rampart, they supposed them to be panic-stricken and at the same time the more open to attack for being just then taken up with their task. They advanced, therefore, with hideous yells. The Romans without a pause in their work, on which the reserves were engaged, began the action with their troops of the first and second lines, who had been standing alert and armed in front of the working party. Besides their valour, they had an advantage from the elevation, for their javelins and spears, instead of falling without effect, as they mostly do when thrown on a level field, were steadied by their own weight and all struck home. The Gauls were burdened with the missiles which had either trans-fixed their bodies, or, sticking in their shields, had made them very heavy; their dash had carried them almost up the slope, but first they halted, uncertain what to do, and then—for the mere delay had abated their ardour and increased that of their foes—they were thrown back, and falling one upon

B.C 350

A.U.C.
404

super alios stragemque inter se caede ipsa foediorum dare; adeo praecipiti turba obtriti plures quam ferro necati.

A.U.C.
405

XXIV. Necdum certa Romanis victoria erat; alia
2 in campum degressis supererat moles; namque multitudo Gallorum, sensum omnem talis damni exsuperans, velut nova rursus exoriente acie integrum 3 militem adversus victorem hostem ciebat; stetitque suppresso impetu Romanus, et quia iterum fessis subeunda dimicatio erat, et quod consul, dum inter primores incautus agitat, laevo umero matari prope
4 trajecto cesserat parumper ex acie. Iamque ommissa cunctando victoria erat, cum consul vulnere alligato revertus ad prima signa "Quid stas, miles?" inquit;
"non cum Latino Sabinoque hoste res est, quem 5 victum armis socium ex hoste facias; in beluas strinximus ferrum; hauriendus aut dandus est sanguis. Propulistis a castris, supina valle praecipites egistis, stratis corporibus hostium superstatis; complete eadem strage campos qua montes replestis.
6 Nolite exspectare, dum stantes vos fugiant; inferenda
7 sunt signa et vadendum in hostem." His adhorta-tionibus iterum coorti pellunt loco primos manipulos Gallorum; cuneis deinde in medium agmen perrum-

436

another wrought greater carnage than even their B.C. 350 enemies had done; for so headlong was the rout, that more were trodden under foot than slain with the sword.

XXIV. But the Romans were not yet sure of B.C. 349 victory; on descending into the plain they found another fight awaiting them. For the Gallic host, superior to any feeling for such losses, sprang up like a new army, and urged their fresh troops against the victorious foe. The Romans, slowing down, came to a halt, for they were confronted, weary as they were, with a second struggle, and the consul, rashly exposing himself in the van, had received a javelin in his left shoulder that had like to have gone clean through it, and had withdrawn for a brief space from the fight. And now the delay had almost lost them the victory, when the consul, whose wound had been dressed, rode up again to the front. "Why are you standing there, my men?" he exclaimed. "You have no Latin or Sabine foe to deal with, whom you may overcome in fight and transform from an enemy into an ally; we have drawn the sword against wild beasts, and we must have their blood or yield them ours. You have repulsed them from your camp, you have driven them headlong down a sloping valley, you stand on heaps of your slain enemies; cover the plain with the same carnage you have spread upon the mountains. Do not wait for the enemy to flee from you, while you stand still; you must move forward and attack them." Roused once more to action by these exhortations, they drove back the foremost of the Gallic maniples, and then, forming in wedges, burst through into the midst of the main

- A.U.C. 8 punct. Inde barbari dissipati, quibus nec certa 405 imperia nec duces essent, vertunt impetum in suos ;
 fusique per campos et praeter castra etiam sua fuga
 praelati, quod editissimum inter aequales tumulos 9 occurrebat oculis, arcem Albanam petunt. Consul non ultra castra insecutus, quia et vulnus degravabat et subicere exercitum tumulis ab hoste occupatis nolebat, praeda omni castrorum militi data victorem exercitum opulentumque Gallicis spoliis Romam 10 reduxit. Moram triumpho vulnus consulis attulit eademque causa dictatoris desiderium senatui fecit, ut esset qui aegris consulibus comitia haberet.
 11 Dictator L. Furius Camillus dictus, addito magistro equitum P. Cornelio Scipione, reddidit patribus possessionem pristinam consulatus. Ipse ob id meritum ingenti patrum studio creatus consul collegam Ap.
 Claudium Crassum dixit.

- A.U.C. XXV. Prius quam inirent novi consules magis-406 tratum, triumphus a Popilio de Gallis actus magno
 favore plebis ; mussantesque inter se rogitabant 2 num quem plebei consulis paeniteret ; simul dictatorem increpabant, qui legis Liciniae spretae mercede-dem¹ privata cupiditate quam publica iniuria foediorum cepisset, ut se ipse consulem dictator crearet.

¹ mercedem Docring : mercedem (or mercede) consulatum Ω.

¹ Livy seems to have in mind the summit now called Monte Cavo, though it is strangely described as editissimum inter aequales tumulos.

² Probably, at this time, on the 1st of July.

array; whereat the barbarians were thrown into confusion, having no definite orders nor commanders, and, turning, charged upon their fellows; and so, dispersed about the fields, and even carried past their own camp in the rout, they made for the highest point in the range of hills that met their eyes, namely, the Alban Citadel.¹ The consul did not pursue them beyond their camp, for his wound was troubling him, and he was unwilling to send his troops against the hills which the enemy had occupied. Giving over to his soldiers the entire booty of the camp, he led back his army, flushed with victory and enriched with the Gallic spoils, to Rome. The consul's triumph was delayed by reason of his wound, which also made the senate wish for a dictator, that there might be someone—in the illness of the consuls—who could hold the election. Lucius Furius Camillus was appointed to that office, and Publius Cornelius Scipio was made his master of the horse. Camillus restored to the patricians their ancient possession of the consulship, and in recognition of this service was himself, with their warm support, elected consul, and announced the election of Appius Claudius Crassus as his colleague.

XXV. Before the new consuls entered office,² B.C. 318 Popilius celebrated his triumph over the Gauls, with great enthusiasm on the part of the plebeians, who, muttering low, would often ask each other if anyone regretted the choice of a plebeian consul. At the same time they railed against Camillus, who by declaring himself elected consul, when he was dictator, had got a reward, they said, for his contempt of the Licinian law more disgraceful for his personal cupidity than for the injury done the commonwealth.

A.U.C.
406

3 Annus multis variisque motibus fuit insignis:
 Galli ex Albanis montibus, quia hiemis vim pati nequiverant, per campos maritimaque loca vagi 4 populabantur; mare infestum classibus Graecorum erat oraque litoris Antiatis Laurensque tractus et Tiberis ostia, ut praedones maritimi cum terrestribus congressi ancipiti semel proelio decertarint¹ dubii-que discesserint in castra Galli, Graeci retro ad 5 naves, victos se an victores putarent. Inter hos longe maximus exstitit terror concilia populorum Latinorum ad lucum Ferentinae habita responsumque haud ambiguum imperantibus milites Romanis
 datum, absisterent imperare iis,² quorum auxilio
 6 egerent: Latinos pro sua libertate potius quam pro
 7 alieno imperio laturos arma. Inter duo simul bella externa defectione etiam sociorum senatus anxius,
 cum cerneret metu tenendos quos fides non tenuisset, extendere omnes imperii vires consules dilectu
 habendo iussit: civili quippe standum exercitu esse, 8 quando socialis coetus desereret. Undique, non urbana tantum sed etiam agresti iuventute, decem legiones scriptae dicuntur quaternum milium et 9 ducenorum³ peditum equitumque trecenorum,⁴ quem
 nunc novum exercitum, si qua externa vis ingruat,

¹ decertarint ς : decertarent Ω .² iis ς : is MDL: hiis A: his Ω .³ ducenorum ς : ducentorum Ω .⁴ trecenorum ς : c c c Ω .

The year was signalized by many and various disturbances. The Gauls came down from the Alban hills, having been unable to endure the sharpness of the winter, and ranging over the plains and sea-coast, laid waste the country. The sea was infested by fleets of Greeks, and so were the seaboard of Antium, the Laurentine district, and the mouth of the Tiber. It happened once that the sea-robbers encountered the land-raiders, and a hard-fought battle ensued, from which the Gauls withdrew to their camp and the Greeks to their ships, alike uncertain whether they had been defeated or victorious. But by far the greatest of these alarms was occasioned by councils of the Latin tribes, assembled at the grove of Ferentina, and the unambiguous reply vouchsafed by them to a demand for soldiers. Let the Romans, they said, have done with issuing commands to those whose assistance they required: the Latins would sooner bear arms in behalf of their own liberty than of an alien domination. Involved in two foreign wars at once, and worried besides by the defection of their allies, the senate perceived that those whom loyalty had not restrained must be restrained by fear, and bade the consuls exert the full extent of their authority in levying troops: for they must depend on a soldiery of citizens, when their allies were leaving them. They say that soldiers were enlisted everywhere, not in the City alone but in the country, and ten legions were embodied, each of four thousand two hundred foot and three hundred horse. The raising of a new army of this size to-day, in case of any aggression from abroad, could not easily be compassed by the concentration on one object of the

A.U.C.
406

hae vires populi Romani, quas vix terrarum capit orbis, contractae in unum haud facile efficiant; adeo in quae laboramus sola crevimus, divitias luxuriamque.

- 10 Inter cetera tristia eius anni consul alter Ap. Claudius in ipso belli apparatu moritur; redieratque¹
 11 res ad Camillum, cui unico consuli vel ob aliam dignationem haud subiciendam dictaturae vel ob omen faustum ad Gallicum tumultum cognominis dictatorem adrogari haud satis decorum visum est
 12 patribus. Consul duabus legionibus urbi praepositis, octo cum L. Pinario praetore divisis, memor paternae virtutis Gallicum sibi bellum extra sortem sumit, praetorem maritimam oram tutari Graecosque arcere
 13 litoribus iussit. Et cum in agrum Pomptinum descendisset, quia neque in campis congregi nulla cogente re volebat, et prohibendo populationibus quos rapto vivere necessitas cogeret satis domari credebat hostem, locum idoneum stativis delegit.

XXVI. Ubi cum in stationibus² quieti tempus tererent, Gallus processit magnitudine atque armis insignis; quatiensque scutum hasta cum silentium fecisset, provocat per interpretem unum ex Romanis
 2 qui secum ferro decernat. M. erat Valerius tribunus militum adulescens, qui haud indigniorem eo decore

¹ redieratque *F*³⁵: redierant Ω .

² in stationibus Madvig: stationibus Ω .

¹ His father, the great Camillus, had defeated the Gauls after their capture of Rome (v. xlix.).

existing resources of the Roman People, though B.C. 348
the world hardly contains them; so strictly has our growth been limited to the only things for which we strive,—wealth and luxury.

Among the untoward occurrences of this year was the death of one of the consuls, Appius Claudius, in the midst of the preparations for war. The administration of the state passed to Camillus, over whom, as sole consul,—whether owing to his general high standing, which deserved not to be subordinated to the dictatorship, or to the happy omen, in a Gallic rising, of his surname,¹—the Fathers concluded it not meet to set a dictator. The consul appointed two legions to defend the City, and divided the other eight with Lucius Pinarius the praetor. Having a lively recollection of his father's prowess, he took upon himself, without drawing lots, the conduct of the Gallic war, and commanded the praetor to secure the seaboard and prevent the Greeks from landing. Then, marching down into the Pomptine district, he chose a suitable site for a permanent camp; for he had no mind to meet the enemy in the field, unless compelled to do so, believing that he should effectually subdue them if he kept them from making raids, since they subsisted necessarily on plunder.

XXVI. While they were there quietly passing the time in guard-duty, a Gaul came out to them, remarkable for his great stature and his armour, and, smiting his spear against his shield and thereby obtaining silence, challenged the Romans, through an interpreter, to send a man to fight with him. There was a young tribune of the soldiers, named Marcus Valerius, who, regarding himself as no less se quam T. Manlium ratus, prius seiscitatus consulis 3 voluntatem in medium armatus processit. Minus insigne certamen humanum numine interposito

 deorum factum; namque conserenti iam manum
 Romano corvus repente in galea consedit, in hostem
 4 versus. Quod primo ut augurium caelo missum laetus accepit tribunus, precatus deinde, si divus si diva esset qui sibi praepetem misisset, volens pro-5 pitius adesset. Dictu mirabile, tenuit non solum ales captam semel sedem, sed quotienscumque certa-men initum est, levans se alis os oculosque hostis rostro et unguibus appetit, donec territum prodigii talis visu oculisque simul ac mente turbatum Valerius obtruncat; corvus ex conspectu elatus orientem petit.
 6 Haec quietae utrimque stationes fuere; postquam spoliare corpus caesi hostis tribunus coepit, nec Galli se statione tenuerunt et Romanorum cursus ad victorem etiam ocior fuit. Ibi circa iacentis Galli corpus contracto certamine pugna atrox con-7 citatur. Iam non manipulis proximarum stationum sed legionibus utrimque effusis res geritur. Camillus laetum militem victoria tribuni, laetum tam praesen-tibus ac secundis dis ire in proelium iubet; osten-tansque insignem spoliis tribunum, "hunc imitare, miles" aiebat, "et circa iacentem ducem sterne 8 Gallorum catervas." Di hominesque illi adfuere worthy of that honour than Titus Manlius had been, B.C. 348 first ascertained the consul's wishes, and then armed himself and advanced into the midst. But the human interest of the combat was eclipsed by the intervention of the gods; for the Roman was in the very act of engaging, when suddenly a raven alighted on his helmet, facing his adversary. This the Roman first received with joy, as a heaven-sent augury, and then prayed that whosoever, be it god or goddess, had sent the auspicious bird might attend him with favour and protection. Marvellous to relate, the bird not only held to the place it had once chosen, but as often as the combatants closed, it rose on its wings and attacked the enemy's face and eyes with beak and talons, till he was terror-struck with the sight of such a portent, and bewildered at once in his vision and his mind, was dispatched by Valerius,—whereupon the raven flew off towards the east and was lost to sight. Hither to the outguards on either side had stood quietly by; but when the tribune began to despoil the corpse of his fallen foe, the Gauls remained no longer at their station, and the Romans ran up even more swiftly to the victor. There a scuffle, arising over the body of the prostrate Gaul, led to a desperate fight that was not long confined to the maniples of the nearest outposts, for the legions, rushing out on both sides, carried on the battle. Camillus ordered his soldiers to fall on, elated as they were by the tribune's victory, elated too by the present assistance of the gods; and pointing to the tribune, decked out in his spoils, he cried, "Here is your pattern, soldiers! Bring down the Gauls in troops around their prostrate leader!"

- pugnae, depugnatumque haudquaquam certamine ambiguo cum Gallis est; adeo duorum militum eventum, inter quos pugnatum erat, utraque acies animis 9 praeceperat. Inter primos,¹ quorum concursus alios exciverat, atrox proelium fuit; alia multitudo, priusquam ad coniectum teli veniret, terga vertit. Primo per Volscos Falernumque agrum dissipati sunt; inde Apuliam ac mare inferum² petierunt.
- 10 Consul contione advocata laudatum tribunum decem bubus aureaque corona donat; ipse iussus ab 11 senatu bellum maritimum curare cum praetore iunxit castra. Ibi quia res trahi segnitia Graecorum non committentium se in aciem videbantur,³ dictatorem comitiorum causa T. Manlium Torquatum ex aucto-
 12 ritate senatus dixit. Dictator magistro equitum A. Cornelio Cosso dicto comitia consularia habuit aemulumque decoris sui absentem M. Valerium Corvum—id enim illi deinde cognominis fuit—summo favore 13 populi, tres et viginti natum annos, consulem renuntiavit. Collega Corvo de plebe M. Popilius Laenas, quartum consul futurus, datus est. Cum Graecis a Camillo nulla memorabilis gesta res; nec illi terra 14 nec Romanus mari bellator erat. Postremo cum litoribus arcerentur, aqua etiam praeter cetera neces-

¹ inter primos Ω: in primos Harant.² inferum Ω: superum ζ.³ videbantur Ω: uidebatur H.

Both gods and men helped in that battle, and they B.C. 348 fought it out with the Gauls to a conclusion that was never doubtful, so clearly had each side foreseen the result implicit in the outcome of the single combat. Between those who began the fray, and by their conflict drew in the others, there was a bitter struggle; but the rest of the Gallic host turned tail ere they came within the cast of a javelin. At first they scattered among the Volsci and through the Falernian countryside; from there they made their way into Apulia or to the Tuscan Sea.

The consul assembled his soldiers, and having eulogized the tribune, bestowed on him ten oxen and a golden coronet; Camillus himself was commanded by the senate to take charge of the operations on the coast, and accordingly joined forces with the praetor. The campaign there seemed likely to be long drawn out, for the Greeks were poltroons and refused to risk an engagement. He therefore, on the authorization of the senate, appointed Titus Manlius Torquatus to be dictator, that an election might be held. The dictator, after naming Aulus Cornelius Cossus master of the horse, presided over a consular election, and announced, amid great popular rejoicings, that the choice had fallen—in his absence—upon a youth of twenty-three, the Marcus Valerius Corvus—for this was his surname from that time—who had rivalled Manlius's own glorious achievement. As colleague of Corvus they elected the plebeian Marcus Popilius Laenas to be for the fourth time consul. With the Greeks, Camillus fought no memorable action; they were no warriors on land, nor were the Romans on the sea. In the end, being kept off shore, and their

A.U.C. 15 saria usui deficiente Italiam reliquere. Cuius populi 406 ea cuiusque gentis classis fuerit nihil certi est. Maxime Siciliae fuisse tyrannos crediderim; nam ulterior Graecia ea tempestate intestino fessa bello iam Macedonum opes horrebat.

A.U.C.
407-408

- XXVII. Exercitibus dimissis cum et foris pax et domi concordia ordinum otium esset, ne nimis laetae res essent pestilentia civitatem adorta coegit senatum imperare decemviris ut libros Sibyllinos inspicerent; 2 eorumque monitu lectisternium fuit. Eodem anno Satricum ab Antiatribus colonia deducta restitutaque urbs quam Latini diruerant. Et cum Carthaginien-sibus legatis Romae foedus ictum, cum amicitiam ac societatem petentes venissent.
- 3 Idem otium domi forisque mansit T. Manlio Tor-quato ¹ C. Plautio consulibus. Semunciarium tantum ex unciario fenus factum, et in pensiones aequas triennii, ita ut quarta praesens esset, solutio aeris 4 alieni dispensata est; et sic quoque parte plebis adfecta fides tamen publica privatis difficultatibus potior ad curam senatui fuit. Levatae maxime res, quia tributo ac dilectu supersessum.
- 5 Tertio anno post Satricum restitutum a Volscis M. Valerius Corvus ² iterum consul cum C. Poetelio factus, cum ex Latio nuntiatum esset legatos ab

¹ T. Manlio Torquato 5: T. Manlio Torquato, (iii) Ω.
(Walters thinks this a corruption of l. f., i. e. Luci filio.)

² Corvus Ω: coruinus U.

¹ For these commissioners see vi. xlii. 2.

² See v. xiii. 2 and note there.

³ This is the first mention in Livy of a treaty with the Carthaginians, and Diodorus (xvi. lxix.) also speaks of it as the first, but Polybius (iii. xxii.) tells of a treaty between Rome and Carthage made in the first year of the Republic (509 B.C.).

⁴ cf. chap. xvi. § 1 and note.

water giving out, as well as other necessities, they B.C. 348 abandoned Italy. To what people or race their fleet belonged is uncertain. I am most inclined to think that they were Sicilian tyrants; for Greece proper was at that time exhausted with civil wars and trembled, even then, at the power of the Macedonians.

XXVII. When the armies had been disbanded, B.C.
347-346
 and there was peace with other nations, and—thanks to the goodwill betwixt the orders—quietness at home, that the happiness of the citizens might not pass all bounds, a pestilence attacked them and the senate was compelled to order the ten commissioners¹ to consult the Sibylline Books. By their direction a lectisternium² was held. In the same year a colony was sent out to Satricum by the Antiates, and that city, which had been destroyed by the Latins, was rebuilt. Further, a treaty was entered into at Rome with envoys of the Carthaginians, who had come seeking friendship and an alliance.³

The same peaceful conditions continued at home and abroad during the consulship of Titus Manlius Torquatus and Gaius Plautius. But the rate of interest was reduced from one to one-half per cent.,⁴ and debts were made payable, one-fourth down and the remainder in three annual instalments; even so some of the plebeians were distressed, but the public credit was of greater concern to the senate than were the hardships of single persons. What did the most to lighten the burden was the omission of the war-tax and the levy.

In the second year after the rebuilding of Satricum
 by the Volsci, Marcus Valerius Corvus became consul for the second time, with Gaius Poetelius. A report having come out of Latium that emissaries of the

A.U.C.
407-408

Antio circumire populos Latinorum ad concitandum
 6 bellum, priusquam plus hostium fieret Volscis arma
 inferre iussus, ad Satricum exercitu infesto pergit.
 Quo cum Antiates aliique Volsci praeparatis iam
 ante, si quid ab Roma moveretur, copiis occurrissent, nulla mora inter infensos diutino odio dimicandi 7 facta est. Volsci, ferocior ad rebellandum quam ad bellandum gens, certamine victi fuga effusa Satrici moenia petunt. Et ne in muris quidem satis firma spe cum corona militum cincta iam scalis caperetur urbs, ad quattuor milia militum¹ praeter multitudi-8 nem imbellem sese dedidere. Oppidum dirutum atque incensum: ab aede tantum matris Matutae abstinuere ignem. Praeda omnis militi data. Extra praedam quattuor milia deditorum habita; cos vinetos consul ante currum triumphans egit; venditis deinde 9 magnam pecuniam in aerarium redegit. Sunt qui hanc multitudinem captivam servorum fuisse scribant, idque magis veri simile est quam deditos venisse.

A.U.C.
409-411

XXVIII. Hos consules secuti sunt M. Fabius
 Dorsuo Ser. Sulpicius Camerinus. Auruncum inde
 2 bellum ab repentina populatione coeptum; metuque ne id factum populi unius consilium omnis nominis
 Latini esset, dictator—velut adversus² armatum iam

¹ ad IIII (or IIII milia) militum (militum omitted by OHLA) Ω.

² adversus 5: aduersum Ω.

¹ An Italian goddess associated with birth and the dawn, and widely worshipped; in Satricum apparently the chief deity. cf. Warde Fowler, Festivals, p. 155.

Antiates were circulating amongst the Latin peoples with a view to stir up war, Valerius was ordered to deal with the Volsci before more enemies should arise, and marched to the attack of Satricum. There he was opposed by the Antiates and the other Volsci, with forces which they had levied in advance, in case any measures should be taken by the Romans; and both sides being actuated by inveterate hatred, the battle was joined without delay. The Volsci, a race more spirited in beginning than in prosecuting war, were defeated in the struggle and fled in disorder to the walls of Satricum. Indeed, they put no great reliance even in their walls, for when the city had been encircled with troops and was on the point of being escaladed, they surrendered, being in number about four thousand soldiers, besides the unarmed populace. The town was dismantled and burnt; only the temple of Mater Matuta¹ was saved from the flames. All the booty was given to the soldiers. The four thousand who had surrendered were not reckoned a part of the spoils; these the consul sent in chains before his chariot when he triumphed, and they were subsequently sold, and brought in a great sum to the treasury. Some think that this multitude of captives consisted of slaves, and this is more likely than that surrendered men were sold.

XXVIII. These consuls were succeeded by Marcus Fabius Dorsuo and Servius Sulpicius Camerinus. War then broke out with the Aurunci, in consequence of a raid which they unexpectedly executed. It was feared that this act of a single nation might be the joint design of all of the Latin name, and a dictator was appointed—as though to

B.C.
347-346

B.C.
345-343

LIVY

A.U.C.
409-411

- Latium—L. Furius creatus magistrum equitum Cn.
 3 Manlium Capitolinum dixit; et cum—quod per magnos tumultus fieri solitum erat—iustitio indicto dilectus sine vacationibus habitus esset, legiones quantum maturari potuit in Auruncos ductae. Ibi praedonum magis quam hostium animi inventi;
 4 prima itaque acie debellatum est. Dictator tamen, quia et ultro bellum intulerant et sine detractatione se certamini offerebant, deorum quoque opes adhi-bendas ratus inter ipsam diuinationem aedem Iunoni Monetae vovit; cuius damnatus voti cum victor
 5 Romam revertisset, dictatura se abdicavit. Senatus duumviros ad eam aedem pro amplitudine populi Romani faciendam creari iussit; locus in arce destinatus, quae area aedium M. Manli Capitolini fuerat.
 6 Consules dictatoris exercitu ad bellum Volscum usi
 Soram ex hostibus, incautos adorti, ceperunt.

Anno postquam vota erat aedes Monetae dedi-
 catur C. Marcio Rutulo¹ tertium T. Manlio Torquato 7 iterum consulibus. Prodigium extemplo dedicationem secutum, simile vetusto montis Albani prodigio; namque et lapidibus pluit et nox interdiu
 visa intendi; librisque inspectis cum plena religione

¹ Rutulo Conway: rutilo Ω: rutilio UO.

¹ I. xxxi. l.

² i. e. the Sibylline Books.

oppose a Latium already up in arms—in the person of Lucius Furius. After naming Gnaeus Manlius Capitolinus to be his master of the horse, he suspended the courts, and having levied troops without exemptions—as was customary in great emergencies—he led them with all possible speed against the Aurunci. These he discovered to possess the spirit of freebooters rather than of enemies, and so brought the war to a conclusion in the first engagement. Howbeit the dictator, considering that they had been the aggressors in the war and were accepting battle without shrinking, saw fit to summon even the gods to help him, and in the heat of the encounter vowed a temple to Juno Moneta. This vow the result made binding, and the dictator having returned to Rome victorious, resigned his authority. The senate ordered that two commissioners should be designated to erect the temple in a style becoming to the grandeur of the Roman People, and a site was appointed for it in the Citadel, where once had stood the house of Marcus Manlius Capitolinus. The consuls, employing the dictator's army for the Volscian war, made a surprise attack upon the enemy and captured Sora.

The temple of Moneta was dedicated the next year after it was vowed, when Gaius Marcius Rutulus was consul for the third time and Titus Manlius Torquatus for the second. The dedication was immediately followed by a prodigy like the one which had happened long before on the Alban Mount;¹ for a shower of stones fell, and a curtain of night seemed to stretch across the sky; and when the Books² had been consulted and the City was filled with forebodings of divine displeasure, the

civitas esset, senatui placuit dictatorem feriarum
 8 constituendarum causa dici. Dictus P. Valerius Publicola; magister equitum ei Q. Fabius Ambustus
 datus est. Non tribus tantum supplicatum ire placuit sed finitimos etiam populos, ordoque iis, quo quisque 9 die supplicarent, statutus. Iudicia eo anno populi tristia in feneratores facta, quibus ab aedilibus dicta dies esset, traduntur. Et res haud ulla insigni ad 10 memoriam causa ad interregnum redit; ex interregno, ut id actum videri posset, ambo patricii consules creati sunt, M. Valerius Corvus tertium
 A. Cornelius Cossus.

XXIX. Maiora iam hinc bella et viribus hostium et vel longinquitate regionum vel temporum spatio ¹ quibus bellatum est dicentur. Namque eo anno adversus Samnites, gentem opibus armisque
 2 validam, mota arma; Samnitium bellum ancipiti Marte gestum Pyrrhus hostis, Pyrrhum Poeni secuti.
 Quanta rerum moles! Quotiens in extrema periculorum ventum, ut in hanc magnitudinem quae vix 3 sustinetur erigi imperium posset! Belli autem causa cum Samnitibus Romanis, cum societate amicitiaque iuncti essent, extrinsecus venit, non orta inter ipsos 4 est. Samnites Sidicinis iniusta arma, quia viribus plus poterant, cum intulissent, coacti inopes ad opu-

¹ et vel longinquitate regionum vel temporum spatio Cornelissen: et longinquitate uel regionum uel temporum spatio Ω (but U transposes regionum and temporum: L has religionum uel templorum: HTD have religionum).

senate resolved on the appointment of a dictator, to establish days of worship. The choice fell on Publius Valerius Publicola, who was given Quintus Fabius Ambustus as master of the horse. They determined that not only the Roman tribes but the neighbouring peoples also should offer supplications; and they appointed an order for them, on what day each should make entreaty. It is handed down that during this year the people rendered severe judgments against usurers, who had been brought to trial by the aediles. The state—for no specially memorable reason—reverted to an interregnum, which was followed—so that this might appear to have been intended—by the election to both consulships of patricians, namely Marcus Valerius Corvus, for the third time, and Aulus Cornelius Cossus.

XXIX. Wars of greater magnitude, in respect both of the forces of our enemies and of the remoteness of their countries and the long periods of time involved, now fall to be related. For in that year the sword was drawn against the Samnites, a people powerful in arms and in resources; and hard upon the Samnite war, which was waged with varying success, came war with Pyrrhus, and after that with the Carthaginians. How vast a series of events! How many times the extremity of danger was incurred, in order that our empire might be exalted to its present greatness, hardly to be maintained! Now the cause of the war between the Romans and the Samnites, who had been united in friendship and alliance, was of external origin and not owing to themselves. The Samnites had unjustly attacked the Sidicini, because they happened to be more powerful than they, and the Sidicini, driven in their

B.C.
345-343

5 lentiorum auxilium confugere Campanis sese coniungunt. Campani magis nomen ad praesidium sociorum quam vires cum attulissent, fluentes luxu ab duratis
 usu armorum, in Sidicino pulsus agro in se deinde 6 molem omnem belli verterunt. Namque Samnites, omissis Sidicinis ipsam arcem finitimorum Campanos adorti, unde aequae facilis victoria, praedae atque gloriae plus esset, Tifata, imminentes Capuae colles, cum praesidio firmo occupassent, descendunt inde
 quadrato agmine in planitiem quae Capuam Tifataque 7 interiacet. Ibi rursus acie dimicatum; adversoque proelio Campani intra moenia compulsi, cum robore iuventutis suae acciso nulla propinqua spes esset, coacti sunt ab Romanis petere auxilium.

XXX. Legati introducti in senatum maxime in hanc sententiam locuti sunt. "Populus nos Campanus legatos ad vos, patres conscripti, misit amicitiam in perpetuum, auxilium praesens a vobis petitum.
 2 Quam si secundis rebus nostris petissemus, sicut coepta celerius ita infirmiore vinculo contracta esset;
 tunc enim, ut qui ex aequo nos venisse in amicitiam
 meminissemus, amici forsitan pariter ac nunc, subiecti 3 atque obnoxii vobis minus essemus; nunc, miseri-

need to fly for succour to a more wealthy nation, had attached themselves to the Campanians. The Campanians had brought reputation rather than real strength to the defence of their allies; enervated by luxury, they had encountered a people made hardy by the use of arms, and being defeated in the territory of the Sidicini, had then drawn down the full force of the war upon themselves. For the Samnites, disregarding the Sidicini and attacking the Campanians—the very stronghold of their neighbours,—from whom they would gain full as easy a victory and more plunder and renown, had seized and with a strong force occupied Tifata—a range of hills looking down on Capua—and thence had descended in battle-order into the plain that lies between. There a second battle had been fought, and the Campanians, being worsted, had been shut up within their walls; and having, after the loss of their choicest troops, no prospect of relief at hand, had been driven to seek assistance of the Romans.

XXX. Their ambassadors, on being introduced into the senate, spoke substantially as follows: “The Campanian people has sent us to you as ambassadors, Conscript Fathers, to solicit your lasting friendship and present help. Had we sought this amity when our affairs were prosperous, though it had been begun more quickly, yet had it been contracted with a weaker bond; for in that case, as those who remembered that they had joined with you in friendship on an equal footing, though perhaps as much your friends as now, we should have been less subject and beholden to you; as it is, attached to you by your compassion cordia vestra conciliati auxilioque in dubiis rebus defensi, beneficium quoque acceptum colamus oportet,

ne ingrati atque omni ope divina humanaque indigni 4 videamur. Neque hercule, quod Samnites priores amici sociique vobis facti sunt, ad id valere arbitror ne nos in amicitiam accipiamur, sed ut ii ¹ vetustate et gradu honoris nos praestent; neque enim foedere Samnitium, ne qua nova iungeretis foedera, cautum est.

5 “Fuit quidem apud vos semper satis iusta causa
amicitiae velle eum vobis amicum esse qui vos appe-6 teret: Campani, etsi fortuna praesens magnifice loqui prohibet, non urbis amplitudine, non agri uber-tate ulli populo praeterquam vobis cedentes, haud parva, ut arbitror, accessio bonis rebus vestris in 7 amicitiam venimus vestram. Aequis Volscisque, aeternis hostibus huius urbis, quandocumque se moverint, ab tergo erimus; et quod vos pro salute nostra priores feceritis, id nos pro imperio vestro et 8 gloria semper faciemus: Subactis his gentibus quae inter nos vosque sunt, quod propediem futurum spondet et virtus et fortuna vestra, continens im-9 perium usque ad nos habebitis. Acerbum ac miserum est, quod fateri nos fortuna nostra cogit: eo ventum
est, patres conscripti, ut aut amicorum aut inimicorum 10 Campani simus. Si defenditis, vestri, si deseritis, Samnitium erimus; Capuam ergo et Campaniam

¹ ut ii Walters: ut hi U: ut Ω.

and defended in our time of trouble by your aid, ^{B.C.} 345-343 we must lovingly remember the benefit also, lest we appear as ingrates and undeserving of any help, divine or human. Nor do I think, in sober truth, that the circumstance of the Samnites having become your allies and friends before ourselves should make against our being received into your friendship, though it entitle them to an advantage over us in respect of priority and rank; and indeed there was no stipulation in your treaty with the Samnites that you should make no further treaties.

“It has ever been with you a sufficiently just cause for friendship that he who sought you desired to be friends with you. We Campanians, though our present plight will not suffer us to boast, are inferior neither in the splendour of our city, nor yet in the fertility of our soil, to any people but yourselves; and in associating ourselves with you we bring, as I think, no small accession to your prosperity. As often as the Aequi and the Volsci—perpetual enemies of this city—shall stir abroad, we shall be upon their backs, and what you will have done first for our preservation, that we will ever do for your empire and your glory. When once you have subdued these nations that lie between our boundaries and your own—a thing which your valour and good fortune guarantee will speedily come to pass—your rule will extend unbroken all the way to our frontier. Grievous and pitiful is the confession that our misfortune obliges us to make: to that pass, Conscript Fathers, are we Campanians come that we must be the chattels either of our friends or of our enemies. Defend us, and we are yours; desert us, and the Samnites will possess us. Consider thereomnem vestris an Samnitium viribus accedere malitis, deliberate.

A.U.C.
409-411

- 11 “Omnibus quidem, Romani, vestram misericordiam
vestrumque auxilium aequum est patere, iis¹ tamen maxime, qui, ea² implorantibus aliis³ dum supra vires suas praestant, ante omnes⁴ ipsi in hanc 12 necessitatem venerunt. Quamquam pugnavimus verbo pro Sidicinis re pro nobis, cum videremus finitimum populum nefario latrocinio Samnitium peti et, ubi conflagrassent Sidicini, ad nos traiecturum 13 illud incendium esse. Nec enim nunc quia dolent iniuriam acceptam Samnites, sed quia gaudent obla-14 tam sibi esse causam, oppugnatum nos veniunt. An, si ultio irae haec et non occasio cupiditatis explendae
esset, parum fuit quod semel in Sidicino agro iterum 15 in Campania ipsa legiones nostras cecidere? Quae est ista tam infesta ira quam per duas acies fusus sanguis explere non potuerit? Adde huc populationem agrorum, praedas hominum atque pecudum
actas, incendia villarum ac ruinas, omnia ferro ignique 16 vastata. Hiscine ira expleri non potuit? Sed cupi-ditas explenda est. Ea ad oppugnandam Capuanrapit; aut delere urbem pulcherrimam aut ipsi pos-17 sidere volunt. Sed vos potius, Romani, beneficio vestro occupate eam quam illos habere per malefici-um sinatis. Non loquor apud recusantem iusta bella

¹ iis 5: hiis A: his ̲.

² ea Madvig: eam ̲: etiam UO5.

³ aliis Madvig: aliis auxilium (wanting in O) ̲.

⁴ ante omnes Buettner: omnes ̲.

fore whether it be your preference that Capua and all Campania augment Rome's power, or that of Samnium. B.C.
345-343

“It is meet that your compassion, Romans, and your succour should be open to all mankind, but especially to those who in endeavouring beyond their strength to grant these blessings to the prayers of others, have come themselves to require them most of all. And yet we fought but ostensibly for the Sidicini, in reality for ourselves, since we saw that a people on our borders was being cruelly despoiled by the brigand Samnites, and that, once that conflagration had consumed the Sidicini, it would spread to us. Nor at this very moment are the Samnites come to attack us out of resentment for any injury received, but rejoicing rather that a pretext has been afforded them. Otherwise, if this were the satisfaction of revenge and not an opportunity to appease their greed, was it not enough that first in the territory of Sidicinum, and again in Campania itself, they made slaughter of our legions? What wrath is this, that is so implacable that the blood two armies have poured out cannot appease it? Add to this the devastation of our lands and the booty they have driven off, both men and cattle; add the burning and destruction of our farm-houses and the general havoc fire and sword have wrought. Could not all this placate their wrath? Nay, but their greed must be appeased. It is this that hurries them to the siege of Capua; they must needs either destroy the fairest of cities, or themselves become its masters. But do you, Romans, sooner gain it by your generosity than suffer them to have it by their malice. I am not speaking before a people that

A.U.C.
409-411

- populum; sed tamen, si ostenderitis auxilia vestra, ne bello quidem arbitror vobis opus fore. Usque ad nos contemptus Samnitium pervenit, supra non ascendit; itaque umbra vestri auxilii, Romani, tegi possumus, quidquid deinde habuerimus, quidquid ipsi fuerimus,¹ vestrum id omne existimaturi. Vobis arabitur ager Campanus, vobis Capua urbs frequentabitur; conditorum, parentium, deorum immortalium numero nobis eritis; nulla colonia vestra erit, quae nos obsequio erga vos fideque superet.
- 20 “Adnuite, patres conscripti, nutum numenque² vestrum invictum Campanis et iubete sperare incolu-21 mem Capuam futuram. Qua frequentia omnium³ generum multitudinis prosequente creditis nos illinc profectos? Quam omnia votorum lacrimarumque plena reliquisse? In qua nunc expectatione senatum populumque Campanum, coniuges liberosque nostros
22 esse? Stare omnem multitudinem ad portas viam hinc ferentem prospectantes certum habeo. Quid illis nos, patres conscripti, sollicitis ac pendentibus 23 animi⁴ renuntiare iubetis?⁵ Alterum responsum salutem victoriam lucem ac libertatem; alterum—ominari horreo quae ferat. Proinde ut aut de vestris futuris sociis atque amicis aut nusquam ullis futuris nobis consulite.”

XXXI. Summotis deinde legatis cum consultus senatus esset, etsi magnae parti urbs maxima opulentissimaque Italiae, uberrimus ager marique propin-

¹ quidquid ipsi fuerimus *A*² (or *A*¹)₅: quidquid id ipsi fuerimus (but M omits the whole phrase and H everything between quidquid and arabitur) Ω.

² numenque Ω: nomenque *M*₅.

³ omnium *M*³*A*^x: ominum D^x: hominum Ω.

⁴ animi Florebellus: animis Ω: wanting in O.

⁵ iubetis? Madvig: iubeatis Ω.

refuses righteous wars ; still, if you make but a show of helping us, you will have, I think, no need of going to war. As far as to ourselves does the scorn of the Samnites reach, it mounts not higher ; accordingly the shadow of your help is able, Romans, to protect us, and whatever thereafter we shall have, whatever we ourselves shall be, we shall consider wholly yours. For you shall be ploughed the Campanian plain, for you shall the city of Capua be crowded ; you shall be to us as founders, parents, and immortal gods ; you shall have no colony that surpasses us in obedience and loyalty.

“Grant the favour of your countenance, Conscrip Fathers, and of your unconquered might, to the Campanians, and bid them hope that Capua will be saved. With what thronging crowds of every sort were we accompanied, think you, at our setting out ? How did we leave on every hand prayers and tears ! In what suspense are now the senate and the people of Campania, our wives and our children ! Well I know that all the people are standing at the gates, their eyes fixed on the northern road. What message, Conscrip Fathers, do you bid us carry back to their perplexed and troubled spirits ? One answer would bring salvation, victory, light, and liberty ; the other—I shrink from the ominous prediction ! Do you therefore deliberate regarding us, as regarding those who shall either be your allies and friends, or else have no being anywhere.”

XXXI. The ambassadors were then made to withdraw while the senate considered their request. It was evident to many that the largest and wealthiest city of Italy, with a very fertile territory near the

A.U.C.
409-411

- quus ad varietates annonae horreum populi Romani fore videbatur, tamen tanta utilitate fides antiquior fuit, responditque ita ex auctoritate senatus consul.
- 2 “Auxilio vos, Campani, dignos censet senatus; sed ita vobiscum amicitiam institui par est, ne qua vetustior amicitia ac societas violetur. Samnites nobiscum foedere iuncti sunt; itaque arma, deos prius quam homines violatura, adversus Samnites vobis negamus; legatos, sicut fas iusque est, ad socios atque amicos precatum mittemus, ne qua vobis
- 3 vis fiat.” Ad ea princeps legationis—sic enim domo mandatum attulerant—“Quando quidem” inquit, “nostra tueri adversus vim atque iniuriam iusta vi
- 4 non voltis, vestra certe defendetis; itaque populum Campanum urbeinque Capuam, agros, delubra deum, divina humanaque omnia in vestram, patres conscripti, populi que Romani dicionem dedimus, quidquid deinde patiemur, dediticii vestri passuri.”
- 5 Sub haec dicta omnes, manus ad consules tendentes, pleni lacrimarum in vestibulo curiae
- 6 procubuerunt. Commoti patres vice fortunarum humanarum, si ille praepotens opibus populus, luxuria superbiaque clarus, a quo paulo ante auxilium finitimi sea, would in times of scarcity be a store-house for the Roman People. Yet this great advantage was of less moment with them than their honour, and the consul, being so instructed by the senate, returned the following answer to the ambassadors: "Men of Campania, the senate holds you worthy of assistance; but on such terms only can we become your friends as shall not violate an older friendship and alliance. The Samnites and we are united by a covenant; we must therefore refuse to make war in your behalf upon the Samnites, for this would be to wrong first gods,¹ and then men; we will, however, dispatch envoys, as is right and just, to entreat our allies and friends to do you no violence." To this the leader of the delegation answered—in accordance with instructions they had brought with them:—"Since you decline to use a righteous violence to protect from violence and injustice what belongs to us, you will at least defend your own; to your sovereignty, therefore, Conscript Fathers, and to the sovereignty of the Roman People, we surrender the people of Campania and the city of Capua, with our lands, the shrines of our gods, and all things else, whether sacred or profane; whatever we endure henceforth, we shall endure as your surrendered subjects."

¹ i. e. the gods who were witnesses and guardians of the treaty.

When these words had been pronounced, they all stretched forth their hands in supplication to the consul, and weeping bitterly, threw themselves face downwards on the floor of the entrance to the Curia. The Fathers were profoundly moved by the vicissitudes of human fortune, considering how that great and opulent people, famed for its luxury and pride, of whom a little while before its neighbours

B.C.
345-343

A.U.C.
409-411

- petissent adeo infractos gereret animos ut se ipse
 7 suaque omnia potestatis alienae faceret. Tum iam
 fides agi visa deditos non prodi; nec facturum aequa Samnitium populum censebant, si agrum urbemque per deditionem factam populi Romani oppugnarent.
 8 Legatos itaque extemplo mitti ad Samnites placuit.
 Data mandata ut preces Campanorum, responsum
 senatus amicitiae Samnitium memor, deditionem 9 postremo factam Samnitibus exponerent; peterent pro societate amicitiaeque, ut dediticiis suis parcerent
 neque in eum agrum qui populi Romani factus esset 10 hostilia arma inferrent; si leniter agendo parum proficerent, denuntiarent Samnitibus, populi Romani senatusque verbis, ut Capua urbe Campanoque agro 11 abstinerent. Haec legatis agentibus in concilio Samnitium adeo est ferociter responsum ut non solum gesturos se esse dicerent id bellum, sed magistratus eorum e curia egressi stantibus¹ legatis praefectos cohortium vocarent iisque clara voce 12 imperarent ut praedatum in agrum Campanum extemplo profiscerentur.

XXXII. Hac legatione Romam relata positis omnium aliarum rerum curis patres fetialibus ad res repetendas missis belloque, quia non redderentur, sollemni more indicto decreverunt ut primo quoque

¹ stantibus Ω : astantibus unknown scholar in marg. ed. Curionis.

¹ The Samnites were a loose federation comprising the following tribes: the Hirpini, the Caudini, the Pentri, the Caraceni, and perhaps the Frentani (Weissenborn).

² For the fetials and their procedure in declaring war, see I. xxiv. 4 and xxxii. 5, with notes.

had sought assistance, was become so broken in spirit as to yield itself up with all its possessions to the dominion of another. They now held it to be a point of honour not to betray those who were become their subjects; neither did they think that the Samnite people would deal justly, if they attacked a country and a city, which, by surrendering, had become the property of the Roman People. The senate accordingly voted to dispatch ambassadors to the Samnites, without loss of time. Their instructions were to inform the Samnites what the Campanians had asked, how the senate, mindful of the friendship of the Samnites, had replied to them, and lastly how they had surrendered; they were then to request that the Samnites, out of regard for the friendship and alliance of the Romans, would spare their subjects, and make no hostile incursion into a territory which belonged now to the Roman People; if soft words proved ineffectual, they were to warn the Samnites, in the name of the Roman People and the senate, not to meddle with the city of Capua or the Campanian domain. But the Samnites, when these things were represented to them in their council¹ by the envoys, behaved so insolently as not only to declare that they meant to carry on the war, but their magistrates stepping out of the senate-house—while the envoys stood by—summoned the commanders of their cohorts, and with a loud voice gave them orders to proceed at once to make a raid upon Campania.

XXXII. When the news of this embassy reached Rome, the Fathers, putting aside all other business, sent fetials to demand redress, and failing to obtain it, declared war after the customary fashion.² They

A.U.C.
409-411

- 2 tempore de ea re ad populum ferretur; iussuque
populi consules ambo cum duobus exercitibus¹ profecti, Valerius in Campaniam Cornelius in Sam-nium, ille ad montem Gaurum² hic ad Saticulam³ 3 castra ponunt. Priori Valerio Samnitium legiones—eo namque omnem belli molem inclinaturam censebant—occurrunt; simul in Campanos stimulabat ira tam promptos nunc ad ferenda nunc ad accersenda 4 adversus se auxilia. Ut vero castra Romana viderunt, ferociter pro se quisque signum duces poscere;
adfirmare eadem fortuna Romanum Campano laturum opem qua Campanus Sidicino tulerit.
5 Valerius levibus certaminibus temptandi hostis
causa haud ita multos moratus dies signum pugnae 6 proposuit, paucis suos adhortatus ne novum bellum eos novusque hostis terreret: quidquid ab urbe
longius proferrent arma, magis magisque in imbelles 7 gentes eos prodire. Ne Sidicinorum Campanorum-que cladibus Samnitium aestimarent virtutem; qua-lescumque inter se certaverint, necesse fuisse alteram partem vinci. Campanos quidem haud dubie magis nimio luxu fluentibus rebus mollitiaque sua quam vi 8 hostium victos esse. Quid autem esse duo prospera in tot saeculis bella Samnitium adversus tot decora

¹ exercitibus ς Walters and Conway: ab urbe exercitibus
 Ω : exercitibus ab urbe M ς : wanting in O.

² Gaurum *L*⁴*A*² Frag. Haverk. ς : caurum *UHT*²*A*: c.
aurum MTDL: caubrum P: claurum F: illegible in O.

³ Saticulam Sigonius: satriculam Ω : satriaculam T: satriculum A.

then voted that the people be asked to ratify this action at the earliest possible moment; and being commanded so to do, both consuls took the field; and Valerius marching into Campania and Cornelius into Samnium, the one encamped at the foot of Mount Gaurus, the other near Saticula. It was Valerius whom the Samnite levies encountered first—for that was the direction which they expected the invasion to take. The Campanians moreover had incurred their sharp resentment, having been so ready now to render aid against them, now to invoke it. But when they beheld the Roman camp, they began, every man for himself, to call loudly on their leaders for the battle-signal, affirming that the Romans would have no better fortune in helping the Campanians than these had experienced in helping the Sidicini.

Valerius, having delayed not many days for the purpose of testing the enemy in small skirmishes, hung out the signal for a battle. But first he spoke a few words of encouragement to his soldiers, bidding them have no fear of a strange war and a strange enemy. With every advance of their arms from Rome, he said, they came to nations that were more and more unwarlike. They must not judge of the courage of the Samnites by the defeats they had administered to the Sidicini and Campanians. Whatever their respective qualities, it was inevitable that when they fought together, one side should be vanquished. As for the Campanians, there was no question they had been beaten rather by the enervation resulting from excessive luxury and by their own effeminacy, than by the strength of their enemies. Furthermore, what were the Samnites' two successful wars in so many ages, as

B.C.
345-343

populi Romani, qui triumphos paene plures quam annos ab urbe condita numeret; qui omnia circa se, 9 Sabinos Etruriam Latinos Hernicos Aequos Volscos Auruncos, domita armis habeat¹ qui Gallos tot proeliis caesos postremo in mare ac naves fuga compulerit? Cum gloria belli ac virtute sua quemque 10 fretos ire in aciem debere, tum etiam intueri cuius ductu auspicioque ineunda pugna sit, utrum qui,
 11 audiendus dumtaxat, magnificus adhortator sit, verbis tantum ferox, operum militarium expers, an qui et ipse tela tractare, procedere ante signa, versari media
 12 in mole pugnae sciat. "Facta mea, non dicta vos, milites" inquit, "sequi volo, nec disciplinam modo sed exemplum etiam a me petere. Non factionibus² nec per coitiones³ usitatas nobilibus, sed hac dextra mihi tres consulatus summamque laudem pepererunt.
 13 Fuit cum hoc dici poterat: "Patricius enim eras et a liberatoribus patriae ortus, et eodem anno familia ista consulatum quo urbs haec consulem habuit":
 14 nunc iam nobis patribus vobisque plebei promiscuus consulatus patet nec generis, ut ante, sed virtutis est praemium. Proinde summum quodque spectate, 15 milites, decus. Non, si mihi novum hoc Corvini

¹ habeat *A*²: habeant Ω: habebant (habebat *D*³) D.

² factiones Glareanus: factionibus modo Ω.

³ coitiones ς: *ἐ*tiones (or *ἐ*ciones, or conciones) Ω.

¹ This, the later form of the name, is found here and in chap. xl. § 3, though in other places Livy gives the earlier form, Corvus.

BOOK VII. XXXII. 8-15

against the many glorious achievements of the Roman People, who could count almost more triumphs than the years since their City had been founded; who had subjugated by their arms all the nations round about them, the Sabines, Etruria, the Latins, the Hernici, the Aequi, the Volsci, and the Aurunci; who after beating the Gauls time after time in battle, had ended by compelling them to flee to the sea-board and their ships? He said that they ought, as they went into action, not only to rely every man on his own courage and martial glory, but also to consider under whose command and auspices they would have to fight; whether he were one who only merited a hearing as a brilliant orator, warlike only in his words, and ignorant of military operations, or one who knew himself how to handle weapons, to advance before the standards, and to play his part in the press and turmoil of a battle. "Soldiers," he cried, "it is my deeds and not my words I would have you follow, and look to me not only for instruction but for example. Not with factions, nor with the intrigues common amongst the nobles, but with this right hand, have I won for myself three consulships and the highest praise. Time was when it might have been said: 'Ah, but you were a patrician and sprung from the liberators of your country, and your family held the consulship in the very year that saw the institution of that office.' But now the consulship lies open on equal terms to us, the nobles, and to you plebeians, nor is it any longer a reward of birth, but of merit. Have regard, therefore, soldiers, in every instance, to great honours. Though you men have given me, with Heaven's sanction, my surname of Corvinus,¹ I have

B.O.
345-343

cognomen dis auctoribus homines dedistis, Publico-larum vetustum familiae nostrae cognomen memoria 16 excessit; semper ego plebem Romanam militiae domique, privatus, in magistratibus parvis magnisque, aequae tribunus ac consul, eodem tenore per omnes 17 deinceps consulatus colo atque colui. Nunc, quod instat, dis bene iuvantibus novum atque integrum de Samnitibus triumphum mecum petite."

XXXIII. Non alias militi familiarior dux fuit omnia inter infimos militum haud gravate munia obeundo.
 2 In ludo praeterea militari, cum velocitatis viriumque inter se aequales certamina ineunt, comiter facilis;
 vincere ac vinci voltu eodem, nec quemquam asper-3 nari parem qui se offerret; factis benignus pro re, dictis haud minus libertatis alienae quam suae digni-tatis memor; et, quo nihil popularius est, quibus 4 artibus petierat magistratus iisdem gerebat. Itaque universus exercitus incredibili alacritate adhortationem prosecutus ducis castris egreditur.
 5 Proelium, ut quod maxime unquam, pari spe
 utrimque, aequis viribus, cum fiducia sui sine con-6 temptu hostium commissum est. Samnitibus fero-ciam augebant novae res gestae et paucos ante dies geminata victoria, Romanis contra quadringentorum
 annorum decora et conditae urbi aequalis victoria;

¹ i. e. "Friends of the People." See II. viii. 1.

not forgot the ancient surname of our family—the Publicolae:¹ at home and in the field, as a private citizen, in little magistracies and in great ones, as consul no less than as tribune, and with the same undeviating course through all my successive consulships, have I cherished, and cherish still, the Roman plebs. Now, with Heaven's good help, to the work we have in hand! Seek with me a novel triumph never yet won from the Samnites!"

B.C.
345—343

XXXIII. There was never a commander who more endeared himself to his men by cheerfully sharing all their duties with the meanest of the soldiers. At the military sports, too, in which those of a like age contend with one another in strength and swiftness, he was easy-going and good-natured; he would win or lose without changing countenance, nor did he scorn to match himself with anyone who challenged him; in his acts his kindness was suited to the circumstances, in his speech he had regard to the liberty of others no less than to his own dignity; finally—and nothing can be more popular than this—he was the same in office that he had been while a candidate. It was therefore with incredible eagerness that the whole army, after listening to the general's speech, marched out of camp.

The battle began, if ever battle did, with like hopes on both sides and equal strength, and a self-confidence which yet was not mixed with contempt for the enemy. The Samnites were emboldened by their recent exploits and by their double victory of a few days before, the Romans on their part by the glories of four centuries and a victorious career that dated from the founding of

- 7 utrisque tamen novus hostis curam addebat. Pugna indicio fuit quos gesserint animos; namque ita confixerunt ut aliquamdiu in neutram partem inclina-8 rent acies. Tum consul trepidationem iniciendam ratus, quando vi pelli non poterant, equitibus im-9 missis turbare prima signa hostium conatur. Quos ubi nequiquam tumultuantes in spatio exiguo volvere turmas vidit nec posse aperire in hostes viam, revector
ad antesignanos legionum cum desilisset ex equo, 10 "Nostrum" inquit "peditum illud, milites, est opus;
agitedum, ut me videritis, quacumque¹ inces-sero in aciem hostium, ferro viam facientem, sic pro se quisque obvios sternite; illa omnia, qua nunc erectae 11 micant hastae, patefacta strage vasta cernetis." Vix haec² dicta dederat, cum equites consulis iussu dis-currunt in cornua legionibusque in mediam aciem aperiunt viam. Primus omnium consul invadit hostem et cum quo forte contulit gradum obtruncat.
12 Hoc spectaculo accensi dextra laevaue ante se quisque memorandum proelium cient³; stant obnixi Samnites, quamquam plura accipiunt quam inferunt vulnera.
- 13 Aliquamdiu iam pugnatum erat, atrox caedes circa signa Samnitium, fuga ab nulladum parte erat: adeo 14 morte sola vinci destinaverant animis. Itaque

¹ quacumque F³A³ς: quacū; MFO: quacum Ω: quācū H.

² vix haec Luchs: haec Ω.

³ cient ς Gronov. (L³?): ciet Ω.

BOOK VII. XXXIII. 6-14

the City; each side nevertheless experienced some anxiety at meeting an untried foe. The engagement testified how resolute they were, for they so fought that for some time neither battle-line gave ground. Then the consul, thinking that he must inspire his enemies with fear, since he could not drive them back by force, attempted by sending in the cavalry to throw their front ranks into disorder. But when he saw that nothing came of the confused fighting of the squadrons, as they tried to manœuvre in a narrow space, and that they could not break the enemy's line, he rode back to the front ranks of his legions, and, dismounting from his horse, exclaimed, "Soldiers, it is for us, the infantry, to accomplish yonder task! Come, as you shall see me making a path for myself with my sword wherever I advance against the enemy's line, so do you every man strike down whom you encounter; all that array where now uplifted spears are glancing you shall see laid open with great carnage." No sooner had he said these words, than the horsemen, by the consul's order, drew off towards the wings and left the legions room to attack the centre. The consul was the very foremost in the charge, and slew the man he chanced to meet with. Kindled by this sight, the Romans on the right and on the left pushed forward, every man of them, and fought a memorable combat; the Samnites stood manfully at bay, but they took more strokes than they delivered.

The battle had now lasted a considerable time; there was dreadful slaughter about the standards of the Samnites, but as yet no retreating anywhere, so determined were they to be overcome by naught but death. And so the Romans, who saw that their

B.C.
315-313

A.U.C.
409-411

Romani cum et fluere iam lassitudine vires sentirent et diei haud multum superesse, accensi ira concitant
 15 se in hostem. Tum primum referri pedem atque inclinari rem in fugam apparuit; tum capi, occidi Samnis; nec superfuissent multi, ni nox victoriam
 16 magis quam proelium diremisset. Et Romani fatebantur nunquam cum pertinaciore hoste conflictum, et Samnites, cum quaereretur quanam prima causa
 17 tam obstinatos movisset in fugam, oculos sibi Romanorum ardere visos aiebant vesanosque voltus et furentia ora; inde plus quam ex alia ulla re terroris ortum. Quem terrorem non pugnae solum eventu
 18 sed nocturna profectione confessi sunt. Postero die vacuis hostium castris Romanus potitur, quo se omnis Campanorum multitudo gratulabunda effudit.

XXXIV. Ceterum hoc gaudium magna prope clade in Samnio foedatum est. Nam ab Saticula¹ profectus Cornelius consul exercitum incaute in saltum cava valle pervium circaque insessum ab hoste induxit
 2 nec prius quam recipi tuto signa non poterant imminentem capiti hostem vidit. Dum id morae Samnitibus est, quoad totum in vallem infimam demitteret agmen, P. Decius tribunus militum conspiciit unum editum in saltu collem, imminentem hostium strength was fast ebbing away in weariness and that little daylight yet remained, were filled with rage, and hurled themselves against the enemy. Then for the first time were there signs of giving way and the beginning of a rout; then were the Samnites captured or slain; nor would many have survived, if night had not ended what was now a victory rather than a battle. The Romans admitted that never had they fought with a more stubborn adversary; and the Samnites, on being asked what it was that first had turned them, resolute as they were, to flight, replied that it was the eyes of the Romans, which had seemed to blaze, and their frenzied expression and infuriated looks; this it was more than anything else that had caused their panic. And this panic stood confessed not alone in the outcome of the fight but in the night-retreat that followed. On the morrow the Romans took possession of the deserted camp, and thither the whole population of Capua streamed out to congratulate them.

¹ Saticula Sigonius (cf. chap. xxxii. § 2): satricula Ω.

XXXIV. But this rejoicing came near to being marred by a great reverse in Samnium. For the consul Cornelius, marching from Saticula, had unwarily led his army into a forest which was penetrated by a deep defile, and was there beset on either hand by the enemy; nor, until it was too late to withdraw with safety, did he perceive that they were posted on the heights above him. While the Samnites were only holding back till he should send down the whole column into the bottom of the valley, Publius Decius, a tribune of the soldiers, espied a solitary hill, which rising above the pass, commanded the enemy's camp, and though arduous

A.U.C.
409-411

castris, aditu arduum impedito agmini, expeditis haud 4 difficilem. Itaque consuli territo animi "Videsne tu" inquit, "A. Corneli, cacumen illud supra hostem?"
 Arx illa est spei salutisque nostrae, si eam, quoniam
 5 caeci reliquere Samnites, impigre capimus. Ne tu mihi plus quam unius legionis principes hastatosque dederis; cum quibus ubi evasero in summum, perge hinc omni liber metu, teque et exercitum serva;
 neque enim moveri hostis, subiectus nobis ad omnes
 6 ictus, sine sua pernicie poterit. Nos deinde aut fortuna populi Romani aut nostra virtus expediet." 7 Conlaudatus ab consule accepto praesidio vadit occultus per saltum; nec prius ab hoste est visus quam loco 8 quem petebat appropinquavit. Inde admiratione paventibus cunctis cum omnium in se vertisset oculos, et spatium consuli dedit ad subducendum agmen in aequiorem locum et ipse in summo con-9 stitit vertice. Samnites dum huc illuc signa vertunt utriusque rei amissa occasione neque insequi con-sulem nisi per eandem vallem, in qua paulo ante subiectum eum telis suis habuerant, possunt, nec erigere agmen in captum super se ab Decio tumu-10 lum; sed cum ira in hos magis, qui fortunam gerendae
 rei eripuerant, tum propinquitās loci atque ipsa

¹ The legion was drawn up in three lines; in the first were the hastati, in the second the principes, and behind these the triarii.

of access to an army encumbered with baggage, was not difficult for men in light marching order. He accordingly said to the consul, who was much perturbed: "Do you see, Aulus Cornelius, that summit that rises above the enemy? It is the fortress of our hope and safety, if we are prompt to seize it, since the Samnites have been so blind as to neglect it. Give me no more than the first and second lines of a single legion;¹ when with these I have mounted to the top, do you go forward fearlessly and save yourself and the army; for the enemy, exposed to all our missiles, will not be able to stir without bringing destruction on themselves. As for us, thereafter the fortune of the Roman People or our own manhood will extricate us." Being commended by the consul and receiving his detachment, he advanced under cover through the wood, nor did the enemy perceive him till he had nearly reached the place which he wished to gain. They were then all overcome with astonishment and dread, and while they turned, every man of them, and gazed at him, the consul was given time to withdraw his army to more favourable ground, and Decius himself took his post on the top of the hill. The Samnites, turning their standards now this way and now that, threw away both opportunities; they could not pursue the consul, except through the same defile where a little before they had held him at the mercy of their javelins, nor could they charge up the hill which Decius had captured over their heads. But not only did their resentment urge them rather against those who had snatched victory from their grasp, but so also did the nearness of the place and the fewness of its

B.C.
345-343

A.U.C.
409-411

- 11 paucitas incitat; et nunc circumdare undique collem armatis volunt, ut a consule Decium intercludant, nunc viam patefacere, ut degressos in vallem adoriantur. Incertos quid agerent nox oppressit.
- 12 Decium primum¹ spes tenuit cum subeuntibus in adversum collem ex superiore loco se pugnaturum; deinde admiratio incessit quod nec pugnam inirent nec, si ab eo consilio iniquitate loci deterrerentur,
- 13 opere se valloque circumdarent. Tum centurionibus ad se vocatis: "Quaenam illa inscitia belli ac pigritia est, aut quonam modo isti ex Sidicinis Campanisque victoriam pepererunt? Huc atque illuc signa moveri ac modo in unum conferri modo educi² videtis; opus quidem incipit nemo, cum iam circumdati vallo
- 14 potuerimus esse. Tum vero nos similes istorum simus, si diutius hic moremur quam commodum sit. Agitedum, ite mecum ut, dum lucis aliquid superest, quibus locis praesidia ponant, qua pateat hinc exitus,
- 15 exploremus." Haec omnia sagulo gregali amictus centurionibus item manipularium militum habitu ductis,³ ne ducem circumire hostes notarent, perlustravit.

XXXV. Vigiliis deinde dispositis ceteris omnibus tesseram dari iubet, ubi secundae vigiliae bucina datum signum esset, armati cum silentio ad se conveni-

¹ primum (wanting in O) Ω : primo Häggström "dubitanter."

² educi Ω : diduci Weissenborn.

³ ductis (ductus OL) Ω : secum ductis M. Mueller.

defenders; and first they would be for surrounding the hill with troops, so as to cut Decius off from the consul, and next for leaving his road open, so that they might attack him when he was got down into the valley. Before they had made up their minds, night overtook them. B.C.
345—343

Decius at first had hopes of fighting from the higher ground, as they mounted the hill; then he marvelled that they neither began to attack, nor, if they were deterred from that design by the difficulty of the ground, attempted to shut him in with trench and rampart. Then, calling the centurions to him, he said: "What want of military skill, what slothfulness can that be? How did those people conquer the Sidicini and Campanians? You see their standards moving now this way, now that, first closing in together, then deploying, while no man falls to work, though we might ere this have been fenced in with a palisade. Then in truth should we be no better than they, were we to tarry here longer than suits our interest. Come on then and follow me, so that while there is yet a little light we may find out where they post their guards, and where the way out from this place lies open." Wrapped in a common soldier's cloak and accompanied by his centurions, who were also dressed like privates, lest the enemy should notice that the general was on his rounds, he investigated all these matters.

XXXV. Next, having disposed the sentries, he commanded that the word be passed to everybody, that on hearing the trumpet sound for the second watch they should silently arm and present themselves before him. When they had assembled there rent. Quo ubi, sicut edictumerat, taciti convenerunt, “Hoc silentium, milites,” inquit, “omisso militari ad-sensu in me audiendo servandum est. Ubi sententiam meam vobis peregero, tum quibus eadem placebunt

 in dextram partem taciti transibitis; quae pars
 3 maior erit, eo stabitur consilio. Nunc quae mente agitem audite. Non fuga delatos nec inertia relictos hic vos circumvenit hostis: virtute cepistis 4 locum, virtute hinc oportet evadatis. Veniendo huc exercitum egregium populo Romano servastis:
 erumpendo hinc vosmet ipsos servate; digni estis
 qui pauci pluribus opem tuleritis, ipsi nullius auxilio 5 egueritis. Cum eo hoste res est qui hesterno die delendi omnis exercitus fortuna per socordiam usus
 non sit, hunc tam opportunum collem imminentem
 capiti suo non ante viderit quam captum a nobis, 6 nos tam paucos tot ipse¹ milibus hominum nec ascensu arcuerit² nec tenentes locum, cum diei tantum superesset, vallo circumdederit. Quem vi-dentem ac vigilantem sic eluseritis, sopitum oportet 7 fallatis, immo necesse est; in eo enim loco res sunt nostrae, ut vobis ego magis necessitatis vestrae 8 index quam consilii auctor sim. Neque enim maneatis an abeatis hinc deliberari potest, cum praeter arma et animos armorum memores nihil vobis fortuna reliqui fecerit fameque et siti moriendum sit,

¹ ipse ς : ipsi (corrected by A from ipsis) Ω .

² arcuerit ς : arcuerint A^2 : arguerit PFU: arguerint Ω .

without a word, as he had ordered, he thus began: B.C.
345-343
 "You must preserve this silence, soldiers, as you listen to me, omitting all soldier-like acclaim. When I have finished explaining my plan, then those of you who find it good will quietly pass over to the right; on whichever side the majority shall be, we will abide by their decision. Hear now what I have in mind. The enemy has not invested you here as men who ran away or were left behind through laziness: it was by valour that you took the place, and by valour you must escape from it. By coming hither you saved a splendid army for the Roman People; save yourselves by breaking out. You are worthy to have carried help, though few, to greater numbers, and to have needed no man's help yourselves. You have an enemy to deal with who neglected yesterday through indolence an opportunity of destroying our whole army; who failed to see the importance of this hill by which he is commanded, until we had taken it; who, though we were so few and his own thousands so many, neither kept us from gaining the ascent, nor, when the place was ours and much daylight still remained, surrounded us with entrenchments. An enemy whom you thus eluded while he was wide awake and watching, you ought to baffle when he is overcome with sleep. Indeed it is necessary that you do so, for our situation is such that I am rather pointing out your necessity to you than advocating a plan. Nor truly can it be a debatable question whether you should stay or go away from here, since Fortune has left you nothing but your arms and the spirit to employ them, and we must die of hunger and thirst, if we dread the

A.U.C.
409-411

si plus quam viros ac Romanos decet ferrum time-9 amus. Ergo una est salus erumpere hinc atque abire; id aut interdiu aut nocte faciamus oportet.
 10 Ecce autem aliud minus dubium; quippe si lux expectetur, quae spes est non vallo perpetuo fos-saque nos saepturum hostem, qui nunc corporibus suis subiectis undique cinxerit, ut videtis, collem?
 Atqui si nox opportuna est eruptioni, sicut est, 11 haec profecto noctis aptissima hora est. Signo secundae vigiliae convenistis, quod tempus mortales somno altissimo premit; per corpora sopita vadetis vel silentio incautos fallentes vel sentientibus clamore 12 subito pavorem iniecturi. Me modo sequimini, quem secuti estis; ego eandem quae duxit huc sequar fortunam. Quibus haec salutaria videntur, agitedum, in dextram partem pedibus transite."

XXXVI. Omnes transierunt, vadentemque per 2 intermissa custodiis loca Decium secuti sunt. Iam evaserant media castra, cum superscandens vigilum strata somno corpora miles offenso scuto praebuit sonitum; quo excitatus vigil cum proximum movisset erectique alios concitarent, ignari cives an hostes essent, praesidium erumperet an consul castra
 3 cepisset, Decius, quoniam non fallerent, clamorem

sword's point more than it is fitting men and Romans should. Our one way of safety, then, is to break through and get away. We must do this either in the day-time or at night. But this, look you, is a question that is even less in doubt, for if we should wait for dawn, what hope is there that the enemy would not hem us in with a continuous trench and rampart, who has now, as you see, encompassed the hill on every hand with the bodies of his men lying below us. And yet, if night is favourable for our sally, as it is, this is surely the fittest hour of the night. You have come together on the signal of the second watch, when sleep lies heaviest on mortals: you will make your way among drowsy forms, either eluding them unsuspected in your silence, or ready, if they should perceive you, to affright them with a sudden shout. Do but follow me, whom you have followed hitherto; I will follow that same Fortune that has led us hither. Now then let those who approve my plan step over to the right."

B.C.
345-343

XXXVI. They all crossed over. Decius then made his way through the spaces left unguarded, and they followed him. They had already got half way through the camp, when a soldier in stepping over the bodies of some sleeping sentries struck his shield and made a sound. A sentry was awakened by this, and having shaken his neighbour, they stood up and began to rouse the rest, not knowing whether they had to do with friends or foes, whether the party on the hill were escaping, or the consul had captured the camp. Decius, seeing that they were discovered, gave the order to his men, and they set up such a shout that the Samnites,

- tollere iussis militibus torpidos somno insuper pavore
 exanimat, quo praepediti nec arma impigre capere 4 nec obsistere nec insequi poterant. Inter trepidationem tumultumque Samnitium praesidium Romanum obviis custodibus caesis ad castra consulis pervadit.
- 5 Aliquantum supererat noctis iamque in tuto videbantur esse, cum Decius "Macte virtute" inquit,
 "milites Romani, este;¹ vestrum iter ac reditum
 6 omnia saecula laudibus ferent; sed ad conspiciendam tantam virtutem luce ac die opus est, nec vos digni estis quos cum tanta gloria in castra reduces silentium ac nox 7 tegat; hic lucem quieti opperiamur." Dictis obtemperatum; atque ubi primum inluxit, praemisso nun-tio ad consulem castra ingenti gaudio concitantur et tessera data incolumes reverti, qui sua corpora pro salute omnium haud dubio periculo obiecissent, pro se quisque obviam effusi laudant, gratulantur, singulos universos servatores suos vocant, dis laudes
 8 gratesque agunt, Decium in caelum ferunt. Hic Deci castrensis triumphus fuit incedentis per media
 castra cum armato praesidio coniectis in eum omnium oculis et omni honore tribunum consuli aequantibus.
- 9 Ubi ad praetorium ventum est, consul classico ad
 contionem convocat orsusque meritas Deci laudes
 10 interfante ipso Decio distulit contionem; qui auctor

¹ Romani, este *A*²: r̄ (or r.) este *M*² or *M*¹ (r este M)
*PFOT*²: recte HTDLA.

who had been stupefied with sleep, were now in addition breathless with terror, which prevented them from either arming promptly or making a stand against the Romans or pursuing them. During the fright and confusion amongst the Samnites, the Romans cut down such guards as they came across, and proceeded towards the consul's camp. B.C.
345-343

It wanted yet some time till daylight, and they now appeared to be in safety, when Decius said, "All honour to your courage, Roman soldiers! Your expedition and return shall be renowned through all the ages. But the light of day is needed to set off such gallantry, nor do you merit that your glorious return to camp should be accomplished in silence and under cover of night. Let us wait here quietly until the dawn." They did as he said. With the first rays of light they sent forward a courier to the consul, and the camp was woke with loud rejoicings. When word was sent round that those were returning safe and sound, who in behalf of the general safety, had exposed their bodies to no uncertain peril, they all poured out to meet them, and, each for himself, praised and congratulated them, calling them their saviours, one and all. To the gods they offered praise and thanks, and Decius they extolled to the skies. Now followed a triumph for Decius in the camp, as he marched through the midst with his battalion under arms. All eyes were directed towards him, and paid the tribune equal homage with the consul. When they reached headquarters, the consul bade the trumpet sound an assembly, and fell to lauding Decius, as he deserved. But Decius, interrupting him, induced him to defer his speech ;

omnia posthabendi dum occasio in manibus esset, perpulit consulem ut hostes et nocturno pavore attonitos et circa collem castellatim dissipatos adgrederetur : credere etiam aliquos ad se sequendum 11 emissos per saltum vagari. Iussae legiones arma capere egressaeque castris, cum per exploratores notior iam saltus esset, via patentiore ad hostem
 12 ducuntur ; quem incautum improvise adortae, cum palati passim Samnitium milites, plerique inermes, nec coire in unum nec arma capere nec recipere intra vallum se possent, paventem primum in castra compellunt, deinde castra ipsa turbatis stationibus
 13 capiunt. Perfertur circa collem clamor fugatque ex suis quemque praesidiis. Ita magna pars absenti hosti cessit : quos intra vallum egerat pavor — fuere autem ad triginta milia¹ — omnes caesi, castra direpta.

XXXVII. Ita rebus gestis consul advocata contione P. Deci non coeptas solum ante sed cumulas novas virtute laudes peragit et praeter militaria alia dona aurea corona cum et centum bubus eximisque
 2 uno albo opimo auratis cornibus donat. Milites qui

¹ triginta milia Ω : tria milia conj. Walters, assuming that ∞ ∞ was corrupted to xxx or xxx mil.

then, urging that all other considerations should be postponed whilst they had such an opportunity at hand, he persuaded him to attack the enemy. They were now, he said, bewildered by the night alarm and dispersed about the hill in separate detachments, and he doubted not that a party would have been sent out after him and would be wandering through the forest. The troops were commanded to arm, and marching out of camp, were led by a more open route—for, thanks to their scouts, the forest was now better known to them—in the direction of the enemy. These they caught quite off their guard by a surprise attack, for the Samnite soldiers were scattered far and wide, and most of them were without their weapons. Unable either to assemble or to arm or to regain their works, they were first driven headlong into their camp, and then the outposts were routed and the camp itself was taken. The shouting was heard all round the hill and sent the detachments flying from their several stations. Thus a great part of the Samnites fled without coming into contact with the enemy. Those whom panic had driven within the enclosure—to the number of some thirty thousand—were all put to the sword, and the camp was spoiled.

XXXVII. The battle having sped thus, the consul called an assembly, and pronounced a panegyric upon Decius, in which he rehearsed, in addition to his former services, the fresh glories which his bravery had achieved. Besides other military gifts, he bestowed on him a golden chaplet and a hundred oxen, and one choice white one, fat, and with gilded horns. The soldiers who had been on the

B.C.
345–343

- in praesidio simul fuerant duplici frumento in perpetuum, in praesentia bubus privis binisque tunicis¹ donati. Secundum consulis donationem legiones gramineam coronam obsidalem, clamore donum approbantes, Decio imponunt; altera corona, eiusdem honoris index, a praesidio suo imposita est.
- 3 His decoratus insignibus bovem eximium Marti immolavit, centum boves militibus dono dedit qui secum in expeditione fuerant. Iisdem militibus legiones libras farris et sextarios vini contulerunt; omniaque ea ingenti alacritate per clamorem militarem, indicem omnium adsensus, gerebantur.
- 4 Tertia pugna ad Suessulam commissa est, quia fugatus a M. Valerio Samnitium exercitus omnino robore iuventutis domo accito certamine ultimo fortunam experiri statuit. Ab Suessula nuntii trepidi Capuam, inde equites citati ad Valerium consulem
- 5 opem oratum veniunt. Confestim signa mota relictisque impedimentis castrorum cum² valido praesidio raptim agitur agmen; nec procul ab hoste locum perexiguum, ut quibus praeter equos ceterorum iumentorum calorumque turba abesset, castris cepit.
- 7 Samnitium exercitus, velut haud ulla mora pugnae futura esset, aciem instruit; deinde, postquam nemo obvius ibat, infestis signis ad castra hostium succedit.
- 8 Ibi ut militem in vallo vidit missique ab omni parte

¹ bubus privis binisque tunicis Weissenborn: singulis bobus binisque priuis *O*⁵: singulis b. priisque binisque (bonisque T) HT¹DLAR: singulis b. binisque MPFUT² (or T¹) A² (or A³) R² (but P¹ has priisque in marg.).

² castrorum cum 5: cum castrorum Madvig: ac castrorum Weissenborn: castrorum Ω: castrorumque Klock.

¹ This decoration was next in importance to the corona aurea or triumphalis. It was made of green grass plucked from the place which had been beleaguered.

hill with him were rewarded with a double ration in perpetuity, and for the present an ox apiece and two tunics. Following the consul's award, the legions placed on Decius's head a wreath of grass,¹ to signify his rescuing them from a siege; and his own detachment crowned him with a second wreath, indicative of the same honour. Adorned with these insignia, he sacrificed the choice ox to Mars, and presented the hundred others to the soldiers who had served with him on the expedition. To these same soldiers the legions contributed a pound of spelt and a pint of wine for each man. All these awards were carried out amid the greatest cheerfulness, the shouts of the soldiers testifying to the general approval.

A third engagement was fought at Suessula, for the Samnites, after the rout inflicted on them by Marcus Valerius, had called out all the men they had of military age, determined to try their fortune in a final encounter. From Suessula the alarming news was carried to Capua, whence gallopers were dispatched to Valerius the consul, to implore assistance. The troops were immediately set in motion, and leaving behind the baggage and a strong garrison for the camp, made a rapid march, and being got within a short distance of the enemy, encamped in a very small compass, for they had only their horses with them and neither beasts of burden nor a crowd of camp-followers.

The Samnites, assuming that the battle would not be delayed, formed up in line; then, as no one came out to meet them, they advanced against the enemy's camp. When they saw the soldiers on the rampart, and when the scouts whom they had

B.C.
345-343

LIVY

A.U.C.
409-411

- exploratum quam¹ in exiguum orbem contracta castra essent — paucitatem inde hostium colligentes 9 — rettulerunt, fremere omnis acies complendas esse fossas scindendumque vallum et in castra inrum-pendum; transactumque ea temeritate bellum foret, 10 ni duces continuissent impetum militum. Ceterum, quia multitudo sua commeatibus gravis et prius sedendo ad Suessulam et tum certaminis mora haud procul ab rerum omnium inopia esset, placuit, dum inclusus paveret hostis, frumentatum per agros 11 militem duci: interim quieto² Romano, qui expeditus quantum umeris inter arma geri posset frumenti secum attulisset, defutura omnia.
 12 Consul palatos per agros cum vidisset hostes, stationes infrequentes relictas, paucis milites adhor-13 tatus ad castra oppugnanda ducit. Quae cum primo clamore atque impetu cepisset, pluribus hostium in tentoriis suis quam in portis valloque caesis, signa captiva in unum locum conferri iussit relic-tisque duabus legionibus custodiae et praesidii causa gravi edicto monitis ut, donec ipse revertisset, 14 praeda abstinerent, profectus agmine instructo, cum praemissus eques velut indagine dissipatos Samnites 15 ageret, caedem ingentem fecit. Nam neque quo

¹ quam ς : quamquam Ω : quia F^3 : postquam quam Alschefski.

² quieto A^2 or $A^1\varsigma$: quia et Ω : quia M : et A ; deleted by Madvig.

dispatched to spy out the camp on every hand reported how straitened its dimensions were, inferring thence the paucity of their foes, the whole army began to murmur that they ought to fill up the trenches, breach the rampart, and burst into the enclosure; and their rashness would have brought the war to a conclusion, had not the commanders restrained the ardour of their men. But since their numbers were a burden on the commissariat, and since, owing first to their sitting down before Suessula and afterwards to the delay in fighting, they were almost reduced to want for everything, they decided that while the enemy were cowering within their works, they would send their soldiers over the country-side to forage: meantime the Romans, remaining inactive, would be reduced to destitution, for they had come in light marching order, with only so much corn as they could carry, along with their armour, on their shoulders.

Seeing the Samnites dispersed about the fields, and their stations thinly manned, the consul addressed a few words of encouragement to his soldiers and led them to the assault of the enemy's camp. Having taken it at the first shout and rush, and slain more men in their tents than at the gates and on the breastworks, he ordered the captured standards to be collected in one spot. Then, leaving two legions to guard them and defend the place,—with strict injunctions to refrain from spoiling until he himself returned,—he marched out in serried column, and sending the cavalry on before to surround the scattered Samnites, as with a cordon of hunters, and so drive them in, he made a prodigious slaughter of them. For in their terror they were

B.C.
345-343

A.U.C.
409-411

signo coirent¹ inter se neque utrum castra peterent an longiorem intenderent fugam, territis constare poterat; tantumque fugae ac formidinis fuit ut ad 16 quadraginta milia scutorum — nequaquam tot caesis — et signa militaria cum iis² quae in castris capta erant ad centum septuaginta ad consulem defer- 17 rentur. Tum in castra hostium reditum ibique omnis praeda militi data.

A.U.C.
412

XXXVIII. Huius certaminis fortuna et Faliscos, cum in indutiis essent, foedus petere ab senatu coegit et Latinos iam exercitibus comparatis ab 2 Romano in Paelignum vertit bellum. Neque ita rei gestae fama Italiae se finibus tenuit, sed Carthaginienses quoque legatos gratulatum Romam misere cum coronae aureae dono, quae in Capitolio in Iovis cella poneretur; fuit pondo viginti quinque. 3 Consules ambo de Samnitibus triumpharunt sequente Decio insigni cum laude donisque, cum incondito militari ioco haud minus tribuni celebre nomen quam consulum esset. 4 Campanorum deinde Suessulanorumque³ auditae legationes, precantibusque datum ut praesidium eo in hiberna mitteretur, quo Samnitium excursiones arcerentur. 5 Iam tum minime salubris militari disciplinae Capua instrumento omnium voluptatum delenitos

¹ coirent T²A³5: coire Ω.

² cum iis M?: cum is M¹ or M² (over erasure): cum hiis A² (over erasure): cum his PFOT²: cunctis HTDL.

³ Suessulanorumque A³ Sigonius: Suessanorumq. (illegible in O) Ω.

unable to agree either under what standard they should rally, or whether they should make for their camp or direct their flight towards some more remote place; and so great was their discomfiture and panic, that the Romans brought in to the consul no less than forty thousand shields—though not near so many men were slain—and of military standards, including those which had been captured in the camp, no fewer than a hundred and seventy. The victors then returned to the enemy's camp and there the plunder was all given to the soldiers.

XXXVIII. The fortunate outcome of this war not only impelled the Faliscans, with whom there was a truce, to ask the senate for a treaty, but caused the Latins, whose armies were ready to take the field, to transfer their attack from Rome to the Paeligni. Nor was the fame of this success confined to Italy; even the Carthaginians sent their envoys to Rome, with congratulations and the gift of a golden crown, weighing five and twenty pounds, to be placed in the shrine of Jupiter on the Capitol. Both consuls triumphed over the Samnites, and after them came Decius, conspicuous in his decorations and so renowned, that the soldiers in their rude jests named the tribune no less often than the consuls.

The deputations of the Campanians and the Suessulani were then heard, and a favourable reply was made to their petition that a garrison should be dispatched, to remain through the winter with them and protect them against inroads by the Samnites.

Capua was even then a far from wholesome place for military discipline, and with its means for grati-

A.U.C.
412

militum animos avertit a memoria patriae inibantur-
que consilia in hibernis eodem scelere adimendae Campanis Capuae per quod illi eam antiquis cul-6 toribus ademissent: neque immerito suum ipsorum exemplum in eos versurum. Cur autem potius Campani agrum Italiae uberrimum, dignam agro urbem, qui nec se nec sua tutari possent, quam victor exercitus haberet qui suo sudore ac sanguine 7 inde Samnites depulisset? An aequum esse dediticios suos illa fertilitate atque amoenitate perfrui, se militando fessos in pestilenti atque arido circa urbem solo luctari aut in urbe insidentem labem¹ crescentis in dies fenoris pati?

8 Haec agitata occultis coniurationibus necdum
volgata in omnes consilia invenit novus consul C.
Marcius Rutulus,² cui Campania sorte provincia even-9 erat, Q. Servilio collega ad urbem relicto. Itaque cum omnia ea, sicut gesta erant, per tribunos comperta haberet et aetate³ et usu doctus, quippe qui iam quartum consul esset dictatorque et censor fuisset, optimum ratus differendo spem quandocumque vellent consilii exsequendi militarem impetum frustrari,⁴ rumorem dissipat in iisdem oppidis

¹ labem Ω : tabem $F^2 T^2 \zeta$.

² Rutulus H : rutilus Ω : rutilius F .

³ haberet et aetate $H^1 T^1 A^2$ (or A^3) ζ : et aetate haberet Ω : et aetate omitted by $D^2 A$.

⁴ frustrari $T^2 D^3$: frustrare Ω : frustrarem omnem A^2 (frustrare A ?) : frustare U .

¹ i. e. the Etruscans, see IV. xxxvii. 2.

fying every pleasure proved so fascinating to the B.C. 342 soldiers that they forgot their native land, and formed a project, while in winter quarters, for taking the city away from the Campanians by the same wicked practice by which the Campanians had taken it from its ancient inhabitants.¹ There would be a certain justice, they argued, in turning their own example against them. Besides, why should the most fertile land in Italy, and a city worthy of the land, belong to the Campanians, who were incapable of defending either themselves or their possessions?
 Why, rather, should it not belong to the conquering army, which had toiled and bled to drive the Samnites out of it? Was it fair that their surrendered subjects should enjoy that fertile and agreeable tract, while they, exhausted with campaigning, wrestled with the arid and noxious soil in the neighbourhood of Rome, or endured the ruinous usury that had fastened on the City and was increasing from one day to the next?

These schemes, discussed in secret cabals and not yet communicated to all the troops, were discovered by the new consul, Gaius Marcius Rutulus, to whom the lot had assigned Campania for his province, leaving Quintus Servilius, his colleague, in charge at Rome. And so having found out through his tribunes exactly what had taken place, Rutulus, who was of ripe years and experience,—for the present consulship was his fourth and he had been both dictator and censor—thought that his best course would be to frustrate the men's impetuosity, by encouraging the hope that they would be able at any time they chose to carry out their plan. He accordingly set on foot a rumour that the garrisons

A.U.C. 10 et anno post praesidia hibernatura — divisa enim 412 erant per Campaniae urbes, manaverantque a Capua consilia in exercitum omnem. Eo laxamento cogitationibus dato quievit in praesentia seditio.

XXXIX. Consul educto in aestiva milite, dum quietos Samnites habebat, exercitum purgare missionibus turbulentorum hominum instituit, aliis emerita dicendo stipendia esse, alios graves iam
 2 actate aut viribus parum validos. Quidam in commeatus mittebantur, singuli primo, deinde et cohortes quaedam, quia procul ab domo ac rebus suis hibernassent; per speciem etiam militarium usum, cum 3 alii alio mitterentur, magna pars ablegati. Quam multitudinem consul alter Romae praetorque alias 4 ex aliis fingendo moras retinebat. Et primo quidem ignari ludificationis minime inviti domos revisebant; postquam neque reverti ad signa primos nec ferme alium quam qui in Campania hibernassent praecipueque ex his seditionis auctores mitti viderunt,
 5 animos consilia sua emanasse: iam quaestiones, iam indicia, iam occulta singulorum supplicia impotensque et crudele consulum ac patrum in se regnum
 6 passuros. Haec qui in castris erant occultis sermoni-would winter in the same towns in the following year also,—for they had been distributed among the cities of Campania and from Capua their designs had spread to the entire army,—and the conspirators being thus afforded time for breathing, the sedition subsided for the present. B.C. 342

XXXIX. The consul having led out his troops to the summer encampment, and finding the Samnites quiet, resolved to purge the army of its trouble-makers by discharging them. Of some of them he said that they had served out their time ; of others, that they were now too old or deficient in sturdiness. To some he granted furlough, singling out individuals at first, but later dismissing certain cohorts, on the ground that they had passed the winter far from their homes and their affairs. Many, too, were sent off on some pretext of military employment, some one way, some another. All these the other consul and the praetor detained at Rome, alleging a variety of reasons. And at first, not suspecting a trick, they were far from sorry to visit their homes again. Later on, when they saw that the first to go failed to rejoin the colours, and that practically none were dismissed but those who had wintered in Campania, and particularly such of these as had encouraged the conspiracy, they marvelled at first, and presently began to entertain very definite fears that their designs had come to light : soon there would be investigations, soon informations would be lodged, they would soon be punished in secret, one by one, and would be made to feel the unrestrained and cruel despotism with which the consuls and the senate governed them. Such were the fears that were secretly put about by the soldiers bus serunt, nervos coniurationis electos ¹ arte consulis cernentes.

- 7 Cohors una, cum haud procul Anxure ² esset, ad Lautulas saltu angusto inter mare ac montes consedit ad excipiendos quos consul aliis atque aliis, ut ante
8 dictum est, causis mittebat. Iam valida admodum numero manus erat nec quicquam ad iusti exercitus formam praeter ducem deerat. Incompositi itaque praedantes in agrum Albanum perveniunt et sub
9 iugo Albae Longae castra vallo cingunt. Perfecto inde opere reliquum diei de imperatore sumendo sentiis decertant, nulli ex praesentibus satis
10 fidentes: quem autem ab Roma posse exciri? quem patrum aut plebis esse qui aut se tanto periculo sciens offerat aut cui ex iniuria insanientis exercitus
11 causa recte committatur? Postero die cum eadem deliberatio teneret, ex praedatoribus vagis quidam compertum attulerunt T. Quinctium in Tusculano 12 agrum colere, urbis honorumque immemorem. Patriciae hic vir gentis erat, cui cum militiae magna cum gloria actae finem pes alter ex vulnere claudus fecisset, ruri agere vitam procul ambitione ac foro
13 constituit. Nomine audito extemplo agnovere virum et, quod bene verteret, acciri iusserunt. Sed parum

¹ electos Gebhard: eiectos Ω Frag. Haverk. ς : exsectos Claud Dupuy.

² Anxure ς : anxur ς : anxyr Ω .

¹ Later called Tarracina.

² As Livy has mentioned no particular grievance, it is supposed that he refers to the oppressive usury.

in the camp, for they saw that the sinews of their B.C. 342 plot had been plucked out by the consul's artifice.

One cohort which was stationed not far from Anxur¹ went into camp near Lautulae, in the narrow pass between the sea and the mountains, where they could intercept those whom the consul continued to dismiss, on one pretext or another, as has been said before. They were soon a very numerous body, and lacked no essential element of an army except a general. And so, without order, and pillaging as they went, they proceeded as far as the Alban country, and under the ridge of Alba Longa encamped and threw up a rampart. Having finished the work, they employed the remainder of the day in wrangling over the choice of a general, for they had no great confidence in any one there present. But whom could they summon from Rome? What patrician or plebeian was there who would wittingly expose himself to so great a danger, or to whom the cause of the army, maddened by its wrongs,² could fitly be committed? On the following day, while they were debating the same question, certain of their roving foragers reported having learned that Titus Quinctius was living on a farm near Tusculum, with no thoughts of the City or its honours. This man, who belonged to a noble family, had won great distinction in the wars, but a lameness in one of his feet, resulting from a wound, had put an end to his campaigning, and had determined him to take up his residence in the country, far from the Forum and from politics. On hearing his name they remembered the man at once, and bade send for him, invoking a blessing on this step. But there being little prospect that

spei erat voluntate quicquam facturum ; vim adhiberi 14 ac metum placuit. Itaque silentio noctis cum tectum villae qui ad id missi erant intrassent, somno gravem Quinctium oppressum, nihil medium aut imperium
 atque honorem aut ubi restitaret mortem ni seque-15 retur denuntiantes, in castra pertraxerunt. Im-perator extemplo adveniens appellatus, insigniaque honoris exterrito subitae rei miraculo deferunt et 16 ad urbem ducere iubent. Suo magis inde impetu quam consilio ducis convolsis signis infesto agmine
 ad lapidem octavum viae quae nunc Appia est 17 perveniunt; issentque confestim ad urbem, ni venire contra exercitum dictatoremque adversus se M.
 Valerium Corvum dictum audissent et magistrum equitum L. Aemilium Mamercum.

XL. Ubi primum in conspectum ventum est et¹
 arma signaque agnovere, extemplo omnibus memoria
 2 patriae iras permulsit. Nondum erant tam fortes ad sanguinem civilem nec praeter externa noverant
 bella, ultimaque rabies secessio ab suis habebatur;
 itaque iam duces, iam milites utrimque congressus
 3 quaerere ac colloquia;—Quinctius, quem armorum
 etiam pro patria satietas teneret, nedum adversus

¹ est et Duker: est (wanting in O) Ω .

he would voluntarily assist them, they resolved on B.C. 342 employing threats and violence. Coming therefore to his farm-house in the silence of the night, those who had been dispatched upon this errand caught Quinctius sound asleep, and offering him no choice but authority and rank, or death,—with which, when he held back, they threatened him, unless he would go along with them—they carried him off to the camp. Once there they immediately hailed him General, and dazed as he was by the astounding suddenness of it all, conferred on him the insignia of that office and bade him lead them to the City. Then, more on their own impulse than by the counsel of their general, they pulled up their standards and marched in warlike array as far as the eighth milestone, on what is now the Appian Way; whence they would at once have gone on to the City, had they not learned that an army was coming to oppose them, under Marcus Valerius Corvus, who had been created dictator for that purpose, with Lucius Aemilius Mamercus as master of the horse.

XL. As soon as they came within sight of one another and recognized one another's arms and ensigns, all were at once reminded of their fatherland, and their anger cooled. Men were not yet so hardy in shedding the blood of countrymen; they knew no wars but those with outside nations, and thought that frenzy could go no further than secession from their people. And so on either side both the leaders and their men began to seek for ways to meet and confer together. For Quinctius was sated with war, even war in behalf of his country, to say nothing of fighting against it;

patriam, Corvinus omnes caritate cives, praecipue milites, et ante alios suum exercitum, complexus.

4 Is ad¹ conloquium processit. Cognito ei extemplo haud minore² ab adversariis verecundia quam ab suis silentium datum.

"Deos" inquit "immortales, milites, vestros³ meosque ab urbe proficiscens ita adoravi veniamque supplex poposci ut mihi de vobis concordiae partae
5 gloriam non victoriam darent. Satis fuit eritque unde belli decus pariat: hinc pax petenda est. Quod deos immortales inter nuncupanda vota exposci, eius me compotem voti vos facere potestis,
6 si meminisse vultis non vos in Samnio nec in Volscis, sed in Romano solo castra habere, si illos colles quos cernitis patriae vestrae esse, si hunc exercitum civium vestrorum, si me consulem vestrum, cuius ductu auspicioque priore anno bis legiones Sam-
7 nitium fudistis, bis castra vi cepistis. Ego sum M. Valerius Corvus, milites, cuius vos nobilitatem beneficiis erga vos, non iniuriis, sensistis, nullius superbae in vos legis, nullius crudelis senatus consulti auctor, in omnibus meis imperiis in me severior quam in 8 vos. Ac si cui genus, si cui sua virtus, si cui etiam maiestas, si cui honores subdere spiritus potuerunt, iis⁴ eram natus, id specimen mei dederam, ea aetate consulatum adeptus eram, ut potuerim tres et viginti

¹ is ad Madvig: ad Ω .

² minore Perizonius: minor Ω : minor eius L.

³ vestros H. J. Mueller: uestros publicos Ω .

⁴ iis ς : his U: is Ω .

and the affection of Corvinus embraced all his fellow-citizens, particularly the soldiers, and above all others, his own army. He now came forward to parley, and being recognized, was instantly accorded a silent attention, in which his opponents showed as great respect for him as did his followers. B.C. 342

“Soldiers,” he began, “as I was setting forth from the City, I adored your gods and mine, and humbly besought them of their goodness to vouchsafe to me the glory of reconciling, not of conquering you. There have been wars in plenty, and will be others, where men may win renown : in this crisis we must seek for peace. The petition which I made to the immortal gods, as I offered up my prayer, you are able of yourselves to grant me, if you are willing to reflect that your camp is pitched not in Samnium nor among the Volsci, but on Roman soil ; that those hills which you see are in your native land ; that this army is made up of your fellow-citizens ; that I am your consul, under whose command and auspices you twice last year defeated the Samnite legions, and twice stormed their camp. I am Marcus Valerius Corvus, soldiers, whose patrician blood has declared itself in kindnesses done you, not in injuries ; I have urged no insolent law against you, no cruel senatorial resolution ; in every position of authority I have been sterner to myself than to you. And in truth if any man’s family, if any man’s own worth, if any man’s dignities and honours have been able to inspire pride in him, my birth was such, I had given such proof of my capacity, and had achieved so young the highest magistracy, that I might easily, on becoming consul at the age of three and twenty,

- annos natus consul patribus quoque ferox esse non 9 solum plebi. Quod meum factum dictumve consulis gravius quam tribuni audistis? Eodem tenore duo insequentes consulatus gessi, eodem haec imperiosa dictatura geretur; ut neque¹ in hos meos et patriae meae milites sim mitior² quam in vos — horreo 10 dicere — hostes. Ergo vos prius in me strinxeritis ferrum quam in vos ego; istinc signa canent, istinc clamor prius incipiet atque impetus, si dimicandum 11 est. Inducite in animum quod non induxerunt patres avique vestri, non illi qui in Sacrum montem secesserunt, non hi qui postea Aventinum insederunt.
 12 Expectate, dum vobis singulis, ut olim Coriolano, matres coniugesque crinibus passis obviae ab urbe veniant! Tum Volscorum legiones, quia Romanum habebant ducem, quieverunt: vos, Romanus exer-13 citus, ne destiteritis impio bello? T. Quincti, quocumque istic loco seu volens seu invitus constitisti, si dimicandum erit, tum tu in novissimos te recipito;
 fugeris etiam honestius tergumque civi dederis quam 14 pugnaveris contra patriam. Nunc ad pacificandum bene atque honeste inter primos stabis et colloqui huius salutaris interpret fueris. Postulate aequa et ferte; quamquam vel iniquis standum est potius quam impias inter nos conseramus manus."

¹ ut neque Ω : neque Heusinger.

² sim mitior Walters and Conway: mitior sim A^2 : mitior Ω : militio H.

¹ See II. xxxii and III. I.

² See II. xl.

BOOK VII. XL. 8-14

have been overbearing even towards the nobles, not B.C. 342 merely towards the plebs. But what have you heard that I said or did, when consul, more tyrannical than my words and deeds as tribune? In that same spirit I administered two subsequent consulships;
in that same spirit shall this dictatorship with its dread power be administered; so that I shall be no gentler to these my soldiers and the soldiers of my country, than to you—I shudder to say the word,—our enemies. You shall therefore sooner draw sword on me than I on you. It is on your side that the trumpets will sound, on your side that the battle-cry will be raised and the attack begin, if fight we must. Steel your hearts to do that which neither your fathers nor yet your grandfathers could resolve upon—neither those who seceded to the Sacred Mount, nor those who later encamped upon the Aventine.¹ Wait until to each of you—as once to Coriolanus²—your mothers and wives come forth from the City with dishevelled hair. On that day the legions of the Volsci ceased fighting, because they had a Roman leader: will you, an army of Romans, not relinquish this impious war? Titus Quinctius, whatever be your position over there—whether you have taken it voluntarily or against your will,—if we must do battle, do you retire to the rear; you will even flee with less discredit, turning your back upon your fellow-citizens, than you will incur in fighting against your country. Now, however, to make peace you will stand with honour and credit amongst the foremost, and will be a salutary mediator at this conference. Let your men ask what is reasonable, and receive it; yet must we rather put up with what is not, than join together in impious strife.”

- A.U.C. 15 T. Quinctius plenus lacrimarum ad suos versus 412 "Me quoque" inquit, "milites, si quis usus mei 16 est, meliorem pacis quam belli habetis ducem. Non enim illa modo Volscus aut Samnis sed Romanus verba fecit, vester consul, vester imperator, milites, cuius auspicia pro vobis experti nolite adversus vos 17 velle experiri. Qui pugnarent vobiscum infestius, et alios duces senatus habuit: qui maxime vobis,
 suis militibus, parceret, cui plurimum vos, imperatori 18 vestro, crederetis, eum elegit. Pacem etiam qui vincere possunt volunt; quid nos velle oportet?
 19 Quin omissis ira et spe, fallacibus auctoribus, nos ipsos nostraque omnia cognitae permittimus fidei?"

XLI. Approbantibus clamore cunctis T. Quinctius ante signa progressus in potestate dictatoris milites fore dixit; oravit ut causam miserorum civium susciperet susceptamque eadem fide qua rem publi-2 cam administrare solitus esset tueretur: sibi se privatim nihil cavere; nolle alibi quam in innocentia spem habere; militibus cavendum, quod apud patres semel plebi iterum legionibus cautum sit ne fraudi secessio esset.

- 3 Quinctio conlaudato, ceteris bonum animum habere
 iussis, dictator equo citato ad urbem revectus auctori-

¹ Livy said nothing of such a stipulation at the time of the first reconciliation; for the circumstances attending the second, see II. liv.

Titus Quinctius turned with streaming eyes and B.C. 342 addressed his people: "I, too, soldiers, if I am of any use to you, can better lead you to peace than into war. For it was no Volscian or Samnite that just spoke those words, but a Roman. It was your consul, your general, soldiers. You have proved his auspices in your own behalf; seek not to prove their worth against you. The senate had other leaders who would have made more ruthless war on you; but they have chosen him who would deal most mercifully with you, his men; one in whom, as in your general, you might place the most utter confidence. Peace is the goal desired even by those who are able to conquer: what then ought our desire to be? Nay, let us abandon wrath and hope—deceitful counsellors—and commit ourselves and all our cause to a man of known fidelity!"

XLI. A shout of approval burst from every throat, and Titus Quinctius, advancing in front of the standards, announced that the soldiers would submit to the dictator's authority. He begged him to undertake the cause of his wretched fellow-citizens, and having done so to forward it with the same fidelity with which he had been used to deal with the interests of the state. For himself privately, he said, he demanded no assurance, he had no wish to found a hope on aught but innocence. But the soldiers must be assured, as in their fathers' day the plebs had been, and, on a second occasion, the legions, that they should not be punished for secession.¹

After praising Quinctius and bidding the rest be of good cheer, the dictator galloped back to the City, and having secured the authority of the bus patribus tulit ad populum in luco Petelino,¹ ne cui militum fraudi secessio esset. Oravit etiam bona venia Quirites ne quis eam rem ioco seriove 4 cuiquam exprobraret. Lex quoque sacrata militaris lata est ne cuius militis scripti nomen nisi ipso volente deleretur; additumque legi ne quis, ubi tribunus militum fuisset, postea ordinum ductor

 5 esset. Id propter P. Salonium postulatum est ab coniuratis, qui alternis prope annis et tribunus mili-
 tum et primus centurio erat, quem nunc primi pili 6 appellant. Huic infensi milites erant, quod semper adversatus novis consiliis fuisset et, ne particeps 7 eorum esset, ab Lautulis fugisset.² Itaque cum hoc unum propter Salonium ab senatu non impetraretur, tum Saloni obtestatus patres conscriptos ne suum honorem pluris quam concordiam civitatis aesti-8 marent, perpulit ut id quoque ferretur. Aequè impotens postulatum fuit ut de stipendio equitum — merebant autem triplex ea tempestate — aera demerentur, quod adversati coniurationi fuissent.

XLII. Praeter haec invenio apud quosdam L.
 Genucium tribunum plebis tulisse ad plebem ne

¹ Petelino ζ: petillini Ω: petelini U: pollutum O.

² fugisset Rubenius: fugissent (with qui before ab Lautulis)
 Ω: nothing after qui in O.

¹ cf. VI. xx. 11 and note there.

² Whoever broke a lex sacrata was ipso facto consecrated to the lower gods, and became an outlaw.

³ The law protected insolvent debtors, whose goods might not be seized so long as they were in the service, and also assured the soldier of his rightful share of such emoluments as the campaign might produce. With regard to the addition, the commentators are doubtful what its object was; perhaps it was felt as unfair to the rest that one who had enjoyed the (elective) tribuneship should next year be

BOOK VII. XLI. 3—XLII. 1

Fathers, got the people to enact a law, in the B.C. 342
 Peteline Wood,¹ that none of the soldiers should be held to answer for the secession. He begged them also, as citizens, to grant him the favour that none would make the incident a matter of reproach to any, either in jest or in earnest. There was also passed a military law, under penalty of devotion,² to the effect that the name of no one enrolled as a soldier might be struck off the list, except with his own consent. To this a provision was added that no one might later command a century in the legion where he had been a military tribune.³ This clause was demanded by the conspirators on account of Publius Saloni^{us}, who in almost regular alternation was tribune of the soldiers one year, and chief centurion—whom they now call “centurion of the first javelin”—the next. The men were incensed at Saloni^{us} because he had always opposed their mutinous schemes, and had fled from Lautulae that he might not share in them. And so, when this one provision would have failed of enactment by the senate, out of consideration for Saloni^{us}, he himself besought the Fathers not to think more highly of his distinction than of harmony in the state, and induced them to pass this also. An equally shameless demand was made that the pay of the cavalry should be reduced—they served at that time for treble pay—on the ground that they had opposed the conspiracy.

XLII. In addition to these transactions, I find in certain writers that Lucius Genucius, a tribune of the plebs, proposed to the plebs that it should be appointed to the but slightly less desirable post of first centurion.

A.U.C.
412

- 2 fenerare liceret; item aliis plebi scitis cautum ne quis eundem magistratum intra decem annos caperet neu duos magistratus uno anno gereret utique liceret consules ambos plebeios creari. Quae si omnia concessa sunt plebi, apparet haud parvas vires de-3 fectionem habuisse. Aliis annalibus proditum est neque dictatorem Valerium dictum sed per consules omnem rem actam, neque antequam Romam veniretur sed Romae eam multitudinem coniuratorum
 4 ad arma consternatam esse nec in T. Quincti villam sed in aedes C. Manli¹ nocte impetum factum eumque a coniuratis comprehensum ut dux fieret; inde ad quartum lapidem profectos loco munito
 5 consedissee; nec ab ducibus mentionem concordiae ortam sed repente, cum in aciem armati exercitus
 6 processissent, salutationem factam et permixtos dextras iungere ac complecti inter se lacrimantes milites coepisse coactosque consules, cum viderent aversos a dimicatione militum animos, rettulisse
 7 ad patres de concordia reconcilianda. Adeo nihil praeterquam seditionem fuisse eamque compositam inter antiquos rerum auctores constat.
 8 Et huius fama seditionis et susceptum cum Samnitibus grave bellum aliquot populos ab Romana societate avertit, et praeter Latinorum infidum iam diu foedus Privernates etiam Norbam² atque Setia, finitimas colonias Romanas, incursione subita depopulati sunt.

¹ Manli ς : manili Ω : manilii U^2O : mallii U : malli I^3 .

² Norbam A^2 (or A^4) ς : norbē F^3 : norbē $MPOT$: norbae U : orbe LA .

unlawful to lend at interest. Also that it was B.C. 342 provided in other plebiscites that no one might hold the same office twice within ten years, nor two offices in one year; and that it should be legal for both consuls to be chosen from the plebs. If all these concessions were made to the commons, it is evident that the revolt possessed no little strength. Other annalists have recorded that Valerius was not made dictator, but that the whole affair was managed through the consuls, and that it was not before they came to Rome, but in Rome, that this great company of conspirators was dismayed into arming; further, that the night attack was made, not on the farm of Titus Quinctius, but on the town house of Gaius Manlius, and that it was he whom the conspirators seized and made their leader. Thence they proceeded—according to this account—to the fourth milestone, where they entrenched a camp. Nor was it the leaders who suggested a reconciliation, but suddenly, when the two armies had marched out in battle array, salutations were exchanged, and the soldiers, mingling together, began tearfully to clasp hands and embrace each other, so that the consuls, seeing the men to be in no mood for fighting, had been compelled to lay proposals before the senate for the re-establishment of harmony. Thus in no single instance do the ancient authorities agree, except that there was a sedition, and that it was composed.

The report of this sedition, in conjunction with the dangerous war entered upon with the Samnites, caused several nations to forsake their alliance with the Romans, and not only were the Latins unfaithful to the treaty—as they had been for some time—but the Privernates even, in a sudden raid, laid waste the neighbouring Roman colonies of Norba and Setia.

LIBRI VII PERIOCHA

Duo novi magistratus adiecti sunt, praetura et curulis aedilitas. Pestilentia civitas laboravit, eamque insignem fecit mors Furi Camilli. Cuius remedium et finis cum per novas religiones quaereretur, ludi scaenici tunc primum facti sunt. Cum dies L. Manlio dicta esset a M. Pomponio tribuno pl. propter dilectum acerbe actum et T. Manlium filium rus relegatum sine ullo crimine, adulescens ipse cuius relegatio patri obiciebatur venit in cubiculum tribuni strictoque gladio coegit eum in verba sua iurare se non perseveraturum in accusatione. Tunc omnia pretiosa missa sunt in praealtam voraginem urbis Romanae. In eam Curtius armatus sedens equo praecipitavit; ita expleta.¹ T. Manlius adulescens, qui patrem a tribunicia vexatione vindicaverat, contra Gallum provocantem aliquem ex militibus Romanis in singulare certamen descendit² eique occiso torquem aureum detraxit, quem ipse postea tulit et ex eo Torquatus vocatus est. Duae tribus adiectae, Pomptina et Publilia. Licinius Stolo lege lata damnatus est, quod plus quingentis iugeribus agri possideret. M. Valerius tribunus militum Gallum a quo provocatus erat, insidente galeae corvo et unguibus rostroque hostem infestante, occidit et ex eo Corvi nomen accepit consulque proximo anno, cum annos xxiii habe-

¹ ita expleta Weissenborn: ex plet or expletat or expleta. t. or exiit MSS.

² descendit omitted by all the MSS. but one (r): processit coni. Rossbach (Liv. VII. xxvi. 2).

SUMMARY OF BOOK VII

Two new magistracies were added, the praetorship and the curule aedileship. The citizens were afflicted with a pestilence, and this the death of Furius Camillus rendered memorable. While a remedy for stopping it was being sought in new religious observances, scenic exhibitions were given for the first time. Lucius Manlius having been cited by Marcus Pomponius, tribune of the plebs, to answer for his ruthless conduct of the levy and for having relegated his son to the country without making any charge against him, the young man himself whose relegation was being used against his father entered the bed-room of the tribune, and drawing his sword, compelled him to swear, after a form which he dictated to him, that he would not go on with the prosecution. At this time all sorts of precious things were cast into a chasm which had opened to a great depth in Rome. Into it leaped Curtius, fully armed and bestriding his horse; and so it was closed over. Titus Manlius, the youth who had saved his father from the persecution of the tribune, went down to confront a Gaul who had challenged any Roman soldier to single combat; and, having slain him, took from him a golden necklace, which he afterwards wore himself and from it was given the name of Torquatus. Two tribes were added, the Pomptina and the Publilia. Licinius Stolo was condemned, under a statute that had been enacted, because he possessed more than five hundred iugera of land. Marcus Valerius, a tribune of the soldiers, killed a Gaul by whom he had been challenged, while a raven perched on the Roman's crest and with beak and talons attacked his enemy; from this circumstance he received the name of Corvus, and the next year was, for his bravery, elected ret, ob virtutem creatus est. Amicitia cum Carthaginensibus iuncta est. Campani cum a Samnitibus bello urgerentur, auxilio adversus eos a senatu petito, cum id non inpetrarent, urbem et agros populo R. dediderunt. Ob quam causam ea quae populi Romani facta essent, defendi bello adversus Samnites placuit. Cum ab Aulo Cornelio cos. exercitus in locum inicum deductus in magno discrimine esset, P. Deci Muris¹ tribuni militum opera servatus est, qui occupato colle super id iugum in quo Samnites consederant occasionem consuli in aequiorem locum evadendi dedit; ipse ab hostibus circumsessus erupit.² Cum milites Romani qui Capuae in praesidio relictis erant de occupanda ea urbe conspirassent et detecto consilio metu supplici a populo R. defecissent, per M. Valerium Corvum dictatorem, qui consilio suo eos a furore revocaverat, patriae restituti sunt. Res praeterea contra Hernicos et Gallos et Tiburtes et Privernates et Tarquinienses et Samnites et Vulscos prospere gestas continet.

LIBRI VII PERIOCHA

¹ P. Deci Muris Sigonius (ex vet. libro): Deci Muris MSS.

² erupit edd.: eripuit MSS.

SUMMARY OF BOOK VII

consul, at the age of twenty-three. Friendship was made with the Carthaginians. The Campanians, when hard pressed in war by the Samnites, asked aid against them from the senate, and, failing to obtain it, surrendered their city and territory to the Roman People. In view of this action, the Roman People voted to go to war with the Samnites, to defend these their possessions. The army was led by Aulus Cornelius, the consul, into a difficult position, and was in great danger, but was saved by the act of Publius Decius Mus, a tribune of the soldiers, who by occupying a hill which commanded the ridge on which the Samnites had encamped, afforded the consul an opportunity of withdrawing to more favourable ground; after which, though encircled by the enemy, Decius himself broke through. The Roman soldiers who had been left in garrison at Capua conspired to seize the city, and fearful of punishment, on the detection of their crime, revolted from the Roman People, but were restored to their country through the influence of the dictator, Marcus Valerius Corvus, who by his counsel had recalled them from their madness. The book also comprises victorious campaigns against the Hernici, Gauls, Tiburtes, Privernates, Tarquinienses, Samnites, and Volsci.

INDEX OF NAMES

(The References are to Pages.)

- ACUTIUS, M., 36
 Adriaticum mare, 114
 Aemilius, C., 88, 98, 100; Aemilius
 Mamercus, M., 2, 34, 42; Aemilius,
 M., 110; L., 196, 200, 210, 268,
 270, 304 (bis), 326, 356, 364, 414,
 428, 502; T., 428
 Aequi, 56, 82, 98, 100 (bis), 102, 108, 180, 184, 202, 208, 218, 234, 352,
 458, 470
 Aesis, 120
 Aius Locutius, 168, 176
 Alba, Longa, 500; Albanus ager,
 348, 388, 500; lacus, 52 (bis), 54,
 64, 172, 176, 188; mons, 58, 176,
 452; Albana aqua, 54, 58; arx, 438; Albanum nemus, 52; prodigium, 54, 58; Albani montes, 440
 Albinus, L., 138; M., 298
 Algidus, 108
 Allia, 128, 134 (bis), 166, 180, 188
 (Alia), 196, 294 (bis), 296 (ter), 398;
 Alliensis (sc. dies), 196
 Alps, 114 (quater), 116, 118, 120
 (bis), 118 (Duriae Alpes); Alpinae gentes, 116
 Ambarri, 118
 Ambigatus, 116
 Andronicus, see Livius
 Anio, 132, 348, 382 (bis)
 Antium, 222, 224 (bis), 290, 302, 306,
 450; Antias, 220; Antiates, 212,
 214, 218, 306 (bis), 308, 448, 450;
 Antias ager, 150; hostis, 214;
 litus, 440
 Antistius, L., 298
 Anxur, 28, 34, 44, 46, 56, 500
 Apollo, 48, 80, 86, 88, 96, 188, 426;
 Apollo Pythicus, 72
 Appenninus, 114, 116 (bis), 120
 Appia via, 502
 Apuleius, L., 112, 188
 Apulia, 348, 356, 446
 Aquilius Corvus, L., 208
 Ardea, 146, 150, 154, 156 (bis), 162,
 170; Ardeates, 148 (ter)
 Arniensis tribus, 212, 352
 Arruns (Clusinus), 114 (bis)
 Arverni, 118
 Atellanæ fabellæ, 362 (bis)
 Atilius, L., 46, 62
 Aulerci, 118
 Aurunci, 452, 470; Auruncum bellum, 450
 Aventinus, 78, 80, 176, 506

 BELLOVESUS, 116, 118, 120
 Bituriges, 116, 118
 Boii, 120
 Bolæ, 202
 Brennus, 128, 162
 Brixia, 120

 CAEDICIUS, M., 112; Q., 152, 154
 Caere, 138; Caerites, 168, 422;
 Caeres ager, 56; populus, 424
 Camillus, see Furius, M.
 Campania, 288 (bis), 458, 460, 468,
 496, 498 (bis); Campanus, 468
 (bis); Campani, 456 (quater), 458
 (bis), 462, 464, 466, 468 (ter), 476, 480, 494, 496, 516; Campanus
 ager, 462, 466 (bis); populus, 456, 462, 464
 Capena, 34, 52; Capenas, 30, 64;
 Capenates, 28, 48 (bis), 60, 64, 66, 82, 94, 206; Capenas ager, 42, 48;
 bellum, 56; porta Capena, 432
 Capitolium, 106, 134 (bis), 136, 146,
 148, 154 (bis), 156 (bis), 162, 168,
 170 (bis), 172, 174, 176, 182, 184

INDEX OF NAMES

- (bis), 188 (bis), 206, 208, 230, 240, 248 (bis), 252, 266, 268, 298, 340, 342, 352, 372, 494; Capitolinus exercitus, 162; Capitolina arx, 264; Capitolini ludi, 168, 176
 Capua, 456 (bis), 458, 460, 462 (bis), 464, 466, 490, 494, 496, 498, 516
 Carmentis, 156
 Carnutes, 118
 Carthaginienses, 448, 494, 516
 Cassius, Sp., 252, 258
 Celtae, 116; Celticum (i. e. Gallia Celtica), 116
 Cenomani, 118
 Cincius (sc. Alimentus, L.), 366
 Circeii, 268; Circeienses, 234, 238, 354
 Claudius, Ap., 8, 22 (bis), 68, 262; C., 262; Claudius Crassus, Ap., 2, 336, 338, 346, 376, 438, 442; (Quadrigrarius, Q.), 348; Claudia familia 336; gens, 262, 336
 Cloelius, P., 302; Cloelius Siculus, Q., 302
 Clusium, 114 (ter), 120, 188; Clusini, 112, 120, 122, 124, 126, 188
 Collina porta, 140, 292, 388
 Contenebra, 208 (bis)
 Coriolanus, see Marcius, Cn.
 Cornelius Cossus, Cn., 34, 42, 44; Cornelius Maluginensis, P., 56, 58, 126; Cornelius Cossus, P., (tr. mil. 396 B.C.), 82 (bis); Cornelius Maluginensis, Ser., 212, 216, 254, 270, 288, 318, 326, 382; Cornelius Scipio, P., 66, 82 (bis), 88 (?), 110, 196 (bis), 230; Cornelius (Maluginensis), M., 108, 188; Cornelius, C. (tr. mil. 387 B.C.), 210; Cornelius Cossus, A. (dictator 385 B.C.), 232, 246; Cornelius, A. (tr. mil. 369 and 367 B.C.), 320, 346; Cornelius, M. (tr. mil. 369 and 367 B.C.), 320, 346; Cornelius Scipio, P. (aedile 366, mag. eq. 349 B.C.), 356, 438; Cornelius Cossus, A. (cos. 343 and 332 B.C.), 422, 446, 454, 468, 478, 516; Cornelius Scipio, L. (cos. 350 B.C.) 426, 432, 476
 Cortuosa, 208 (bis)
 Corvinus, see Valerius, M.
 Corvus, see Valerius, M.
 Cremera, 196
 Crustumini montes, 128
 Curatius, P., 38
 Curtius, M., 372, 514; Mettius, 374; Iacus Curtius, 372
 DECEMBRES IDUS, 32, 40
 Decius Mus, P., 428; Decius, P. (tr. mil. 343 B.C.), 476, 478, 480 (bis), 484 (bis), 486 (quinquies), 488, 490, 494, 516
 Delphi, 54, 58, 88, 96, 98, 188; Delphicum oraculum, 52
 Dialis, apex, 344; flamen, 178
 Diana, 48
 Duillius, Cn., 46; M., 408; C., 428
 Duriae Alpes, see Alpīs
 ECETRA, 302
 Empulum, 416
 Esquilina, porta, 274
 Etitovius, 118
 Etruria, 2, 4, 14, 16, 18, 22, 28, 60 (ter), 64, 122, 184, 198, 200, 202, 212, 216, 218, 224, 270, 360, 392, 470; Etrusci, 18, 22, 52 (bis), 54, 114, 120 (bis), 124 (bis), 200, 204, 206, 208, 224 (bis), 226 (ter), 228 (bis); Etruscus mos, 76; Etrusca dea (see Nortia), 366; disciplina, 54; Etruscum bellum, 18, 212, 224, 340, 420 (bis), 428; nomen, 78, 412
 FABIVS AMBUSTUS, K., 34, 82; Fabius Ambustus, M., 120, 272, 312 (bis), 314, 320 (ter), 388, 390 (bis), 412, 414 (bis), 418; Fabius, Q. (son of preceding, one of three envoys), 124, 196; Fabius Dorsuo, C., 154, 174; Fabius, C. (cos. 308 B.C.), 392, 406, 414 (bis); Fabius, M. (interrex, 355 B.C., possibly the same with the M. Fabius Dorsuo of p. 450), 430, 432; Fabius Dorsuo, M., 450; Fabius Ambustus, Q., 454; Fabia, minor, 312; Fabii (M. Ambusti filii tres), 120, 124, 126; Fabii (ad Cremeram caesi), 196; Fabiae, sorores, 312; Fabia gens, 154, 174
 Falerii, 34, 94 (bis), 146, 218, 408; Falernus ager, 446
 Faliscus, 30, 64; Falisci, 28 (bis), 40, 48 (bis), 60, 64, 66, 90 (ter), 92 (bis), 96 (bis), 188 (bis), 206, 408, 412 (bis), 426, 494; Faliscum bellum, 56, 82

INDEX OF NAMES

- Ferentina, 440; Ferentinum, 382
 Fidenae, 182; Fidenates, 14; Fidenas
 hostis, 126
 Fescenninus versus, 360
 Flumentana, porta, 266
 Folius, M., 140
 Furius Camillus, M., 2, 34, 42, 50, 52,
 60, 66, 76, 78 (bis), 80, 82, 86, 88
 (quater), 90 (bis), 92 (bis), 94 (bis),
 96, 104, 108, 110, 112, 146, 150, 152,
 154, 156, 166, 168, 170, 184, 188,
 190, 194, 196, 198, 200, 202, 206,
 210, 212, 214 (ter), 216 (bis), 218,
 220 (ter), 222, 224 (quater), 230
 (bis), 234, 254, 272 (ter), 276 (ter),
 278 (bis), 280 (bis), 282 (bis), 284
 (bis), 288, 326, 328, 330, 340 (bis),
 346, 348, 358, 406, 408, 442, 444,
 446, 514; Furius Medullinus, L., 44, 52, 56, 82, 88, 110 (bis), 272
 (bis), 274, 282, 284, 318; Furius, Agrippa, 110 (bis); Furius, Sp., 300, 302; Furius Camillus, Sp.
 (same as preceding ?), 356; Furius Camillus, L. (son of M., bro. of Sp.), 438, 452; Furiani (the soldiers of Camillus), 226
 GABII, 182, 296; Gabini, 270; ager
 Gabinus, 292; cinctus, 154; Gabina
 via, 166
 Gallia, 114, 116 (bis), 154; Gallus,
 142, 156, 348, 384 (bis), 386, 402,
 442, 514; Galli, 84, 112, 114, 116,
 118 (bis), 120, 122 (series), 124,
 126, 128, 132, 140, 142, 144, 146
 (ter), 150, 152, 154, 156, 160 (bis),
 162 (bis), 164 (quater), 166, 168
 (bis), 170, 172, 176, 178, 180 (ter),
 188 (bis), 190 (bis), 196, 218, 230,
 240, 244, 248, 252, 294 (bis), 348
 (ter), 352, 356, 382, 384, 386, 388
 (bis), 390 (ter), 394 (ter), 402, 404
 (bis), 406 (bis), 416, 432, 434 (bis),
 436, 438, 440 (bis), 444 (ter), 446,
 470, 516; Galli Cisalpini, 120;
 Galli Senones, 188; tumultus
 Gallicus, 382, 388, 442; Gallica
 ferocia, 394; Gallici exercitus, 114;
 Gallicum aurum, 242; bellum,
 124, 152, 168, 212, 240, 294, 340,
 346, 384, 390, 394, 398, 432, 442;
 Gallici thesauri, 244, 248; Gallica
 busta, 162; spolia, 406, 438;
 tela, 174
 Gaurus mons, 468
 Geganius, L., 302, 346
 Genucius, Cn., 46, 62 (bis), 64; L., 358, 366, 374 (bis); Cn. (cos. 363
 B.C.), 364; L., 510
 Gradivus, see Mars
 Graecia, 14, 92; Graecia ulterior,
 448; Graeci, 114, 440 (bis), 442,
 446 (bis)
 HADRIATICUM MARE, 114
 Haedui, 118 (bis)
 Hatria, 114
 Hercules, 48, 118
 Hercynei saltus, 116
 Hernici, 66, 198, 216, 218, 222, 228,
 230, 232, 234, 238, 246, 254, 290,
 356, 374 (bis), 376 (ter), 378, 380
 (ter), 388, 390, 392, 406, 470, 516;
 Hernicum bellum, 212, 366; nomen, 378
 Hispanus gladius, 384
 Horatius Pulvillus, L., 212, 216, 224;
 Horatius, M., 302 (bis), 366
 Hostilia, curia, 186
 IANICULUM, 136, 138, 340
 Insubres, 118 (bis)
 Italia, 114, 116, 118, 184, 448, 462,
 496; Italicae gentes, 114
 Itilius, L., 298 (bis)
 Iulius Iulus, L., 2, 34, 56 (bis), 208;
 Iulius, C., 108, 188; Iulius, C.
 (dictator 352 B.C.), 428
 Iuno, 72, 78, 80, 108, 176, 188, 206,
 248; Iuno Moneta (see also Moneta), 452
 Iuppiter, 80, 168 (bis), 172, 174, 206,
 248, 252, 298 (bis); Iuppiter
 Capitolinus, 190, 252
 Iuventas, 184
 LABICI, 56; Labicani, 270; Labicanus ager, 388
 Lacerius, C., 36
 Laevi Ligures, see Ligures
 Lanuvium, 200; Lanuvini hostes, 268
 Latium, 154, 268, 448, 452; Latini,
 66, 198, 212, 216, 218, 222, 228,
 230, 232, 234, 238, 246, 254, 290,
 300, 304, 306 (bis), 308 (ter), 310
 (bis), 394, 420, 440 (bis), 448, 450,
 470, 494, 512; Latinus ager, 432;

INDEX OF NAMES

- hostes, 294, 300, 436; Latinum bellum, 212; nomen, 450; Latini populi, 440; Latinae (feriae), 58, 64; legiones, 306
- Latona, 48
- Laurus tractus, 440
- Lautulae, 500, 510
- Lavinium, 176
- Libui, 120
- Licinius Calvus, P., 44, 46, 62 (bis), 68, 70, 324; Licinius Stolo, C., 312, 316, 318, 320 (ter), 328, 332 (ter), 336, 338, 342, 346 (bis), 352, 358, 380 (here called C. Licinius Calvus), 382, 410, 416, 514; Licinius Macer (annalist), 382 (bis); Licinia familia, 76; lex, 426 (ter), 432, 438
- Ligures Laevi, 120
- Lingones, 120
- Liparae, 96; Lipareses, 96
- Livius (Andronicus), 362
- Locutius, see Aius
- Lucretius Flavus, L., 102 (bis), 110, 208 (here called L. Lucretius Tricipitinus), 268, 272
- Lucumo, 114
- MACEDONES, 448
- Maelius, P., 44; Sp., 256, 258
- Maenius, P., 62
- Mallius, Sp., 252
- Manlius, A., 26, 56, 96, 196, 200, 230, 262, 268, 318; P., 44; Manlius Capitolinus, M., 108 (bis), 158 (bis), 188, 210, 230, 232, 240, 242, 244, 246 (bis), 250 (ter), 252 (bis), 254, 256, 260, 262, 266, 352, 452; Manlius, T. (brother of M.), 262; P. (dictator 368 B.C.), 298 (bis), 330 (bis), 332, 346; C. (tr. mil. 379 B.C.), 298 (bis), 512 (same man ?); Manlius Imperiosus, L., 364, 366 (bis), 368, 370, 514; Manlius, T. (i.e. Torquatus, the son of Imperiosus), 348, 370, 384 (bis), 386, 422, 444, 446, 448, 452, 514 (bis); Cn. (brother of Torquatus, cos. 359 B.C.), 392, 408 (bis), 414 (here styled Capitolinus), 452; Manlius Naevius (corrupt text), 432; Manlia gens, 266, 352; Manliana turba, 250; seditio, 254; Manlium supplicium, 266
- Marcus Coriolanus, Cn., 506; Marcus Cn. (tr. pl. 389 B.C.), 196; Marcus (Rutulus), C., 408 (bis), 412, 426, 430, 432, 452, 496
- Marcus (praenomen of Manlii), 352
- Mars, 212, 378, 454, 490; Mars Gradius, 174; Martis aedes, 432; campus Martius, 264
- Massilienses, 118
- Mater Matuta, 66, 80, 308, 450
- Matuta, see Mater Matuta
- Mecium (ad), 200
- Mediolanium, 118
- Menenius, L., 212; M., 260, 288, 300, 408
- Mercurius, 48
- Metilius, M., 38
- Minerva, 248, 298, 364 (bis), 366
- Minucius, M., 38
- Moneta (see also Iuno Moneta), 266, 452
- NAEVIUS (corrupt), see Manlius
- Nepete, 224, 226, 268; Nepesini, 226, 228 (bis); Nepesinus ager, 66
- Neptunus, 48
- Norba, 512
- Nortia, 366
- Nova via, 112-168, 176
- OCEANUS, 126
- Octobres, Kalendae, 32 (bis), 40
- Osci, 362
- PADUS, 120 (ter)
- Paelignum bellum, 494
- Papirius, M., 142; Papirius Cursor L., 210, 230, 270, 326; Papirius Crassus, C., 254; Papirius, Sp., 270; P., 288; M., 428
- Pedum, 394
- Petelinus lucus, 266, 510
- Phocaea, 118
- Pinarius, L., 364, 442
- Plautius, C., 392 (bis), 394, 406, 412, 448
- Poeni, 454
- Poeninus (saltus), 120
- Poetelius Balbus, C., 388, 390 (ter), 408, 448
- Pomponius, M., 46; Q., 102; M. (tr. pl. 362 B.C.), 366, 370, 514
- Pomptinus ager, 210, 212 (bis), 232, 268, 442; Pomptina tribus, 406, 514
- Pontius Cominus, 156

INDEX OF NAMES

Popilius Laenas, M., 392, 410, 412
(bis), 418, 432 (bis), 438, 446

Porsinna, 340

Postumius, M., 2; Postumius Albinus, M., 2; Postumius Regillensis, A., 56 (bis), 58, 272; Postumius Regillensis, Sp., 88, 98 (ter), 100, 290 (bis); L. (son of Sp.), 196, 272
Praeneste, 292, 296 (bis), 298 (ter), 394; Praenestini, 270 (bis), 272, 292 (bis), 296, 298, 300, 352; Praenestinus hostis, 272

Privernates, 406, 408, 410, 512, 516; ager Privernas, 408

Publicola, see Valerius

Publius, Volero, 46; Publilius Volscus, L., 44; Publilius, Q., 260; Publilius (Philo, cos. 339 ?), Q., 428; Publilia tribus, 406, 514

Pyrrhus, 454 (bis)

Pythicus, see Apollo; Pythicum oraculum, 54; Pythicae sortes, 78

QUINCTILES, Kalendae, 110

Quinctilius Varus, M., 2

Quinctius Cincinnatus, T. (tr. mil. 388 B.C.), 208, 212, 254, 256, 294, 298; Quinctius Cincinnatus, L. (tr. mil. 386), 212, 216, 224 (bis), 304, 308; Quinctius Capitolinus, L. (tr. mil. 385 B.C.), 230; Quinctius Cincinnatus, C. (tr. mil. 377 B.C.), 304; Quinctius Capitolinus, T., 230, 232, 236; Quinctius Poenus, T. (dictator 361 B.C.), 326, 346, 382, 388, 418 (bis), 430 ("quidam Caesonem alii Gaium praenomen"), 500, 502 (bis), 506, 508, 512; Quinctius, Q. (tr. mil. 369 B.C.), 320; Quinctius Capitolinus, Cn. (aedile 366 B.C.), 356

Quirinus, 176; Quirinalis collis, 154 (bis), 174; flamen, 138, 138

Quirites, 8, 12, 40, 62, 140, 170, 174 (bis), 178, 182, 184, 242, 336 (ter), 340 (bis), 510

RAETI, 116

Regillus, lacus, 198, 294

Roma, 4 et passim; Romanus, 40 et passim; Romani, 2 et passim; Romani Quirites, see Quirites

Romulus, 346

Rufuli, 372

SABATINA tribus, 212, 352

Sabini, 470; Sabinus hostis, 436

Sacer mons, 506

Salaria via, 382

Salinae, 412

Salluvii, 120

Salonius, P., 510 (ter)

Salus, 118 (bis)

Samnium, 468, 476, 504; Samnis, 476, 508; Samnites, 420, 454 (quater), 458 (ter), 460 (ter), 462, 464, 466 (quinquies), 468 (ter), 472 (bis), 474, 476 (bis), 478, 486, 488, 490 (bis), 492, 494 (bis), 496, 498, 504, 512, 516 (ter)

Sappinates, 108, 110 (bis); Sappinas ager (110)

Saticula, 468, 476

Satricum, 222, 250, 272, 274, 290, 304 (bis), 306 (bis), 308, 448 (bis), 450 (bis)

Segovesus, 116 (bis)

Sempronius Atratinus, A., 294, 296

Senones (see also Galli), 118, 120, 188
Septembres. idus, 364

Sergius, M., 26, 28, 30 (bis), 32, 38 (quater), 42 (bis), 48; Sergius Fidenas, L., 56, 96; Sergius. O., 210, 230, 288

Servilius Ahala, C., 26, 32, 198, 260, 264; Q., 26, 52, 60, 82, 126, 208, 212, 214, 270, 300, 302, 320, 358, 366, 388, 414; Servilius Ahala (son of Q.), Q. or Servilius Fidenas, Q. (trib. mil. 382, 378, 369 B.C.), 414, 432, 496 (either same as last, or his son); Servilius Priscus, Sp., 302, 326

Setia, 300, 512

Sextilius, O., 298

Sextius, L., 314, 316 (ter), 318, 320 (bis), 328, 332, 336, 338, 340 (bis), 342, 346 (bis), 348, 352 (bis), 356 (bis), 416

Sibyllini, libri, 46, 448

Sicilia, 448; Siculum fretum, 96

Sicinius, T., 84; L., 212

Sidicini, 454, 456, 460 (bis), 468, 480;

Sidicinus ager, 456, 460

Signini, 380

Sol, 80

INDEX OF NAMES

Sora, 452
Stellatina tribus, 212, 352
Suessula, 490 (bis), 492; Suessulani, 494

Sulpicius Camerinus, Q. 26, 52, 102; S., 110 (ter), 210, 268; Sulpicius Longus, Q., 126; Sulpicius, Q., 160, 162, 198; Sulpicius Rufus, Ser., 208, 254; Sulpicius, Ser. (tr. mil. 377, 376, 370, and 368 B.C.), 304, 308, 312 (bis), 318, 326; Sulpicius Camerinus, C., 270, 290 (bis); Sulpicius Peticus, C., 358, 376, 380, 394, 396, 406, 414, 416, 420 (bis), 428, 430 (bis); Sulpicius Camerinus, Ser., 450
Sutrium, 202, 224 (bis), 226, 410; Sutrini, 202, 204, 206

TARPEIA RUPIS, 252, 384; Tarpeium saxum, 266

Tarquinius, 422; Tarquinienses, 56 (ter), 392, 406, 408, 412 (bis), 416, 418 (ter), 420, 422, 424, 516; Tarquiniensis ager, 208

Tarquinius Priscus, 116; Tarquinius tribuni plebis, 338

Tatius, 346, 374

Taurini saltus, 118

Terminus, 184

Tiberis, 46, 130 (bis), 156, 182, 364, 414; Tiberis ostia, 440; Tiberinus amnis, 128

Tibur, 390 (bis), 392; Tiburtes, 382, 388 (ter), 390 (ter), 416 (bis), 418 (ter), 516; Tiburs ager, 388; hostis, 388, 392; populus, 382

Ticinus, 118, 120

Timasitheus, 96

Tifata, 456 (bis)

Titinius L., 44, 62 (bis)

Torquatus, see Manlius

Trebonius, Cn., 36; M., 268; Trebonia lex, 36 (bis)

Tricastini, 118

Tromentina tribus, 212, 352

Tullius, Ser., 66; Sex. 396 (ter), 400, 402, 404, 410

Tusci, 114 (bis), 118, 150, 152; mos Tuscus, 360; Tuscum mare, 114

Tusculum, 100 (bis), 288, 290, 308 (bis), 310 (bis), 318 (ter); Tusculani, 270, 282 (bis), 284, 286 (bis), 288, 310 (ter), 318; Tusculanus ager,

388, 500; dictator, 286; finis, 422; Tusculana expeditio, 288
Tyrrhenum mare, 114

UMBRI, 120

Utens, 120

VALERIUS POTITUS (also surnamed Publicola), L., 2, 34, 44, 50, 52, 60, 88, 96, 108 (bis), 110, 162, 196, 210, 212, 224 (ter), 268, 288; Valerius Maximus, M., 50, 82 (bis); Valerius Potitus Publicola, P., 212, 214, 216, 218, 224, 254, 288, 304 (bis), 318, 346; Valerius (tr. mil. 370 B.C.), 318; Valerius Publicola, M. (son of P., grandson of L., cos 355 and 353 B.C.), 394, 406, 414, 416, 420, 422; Valerius Publicola, P. (brother of Marcus, praetor 350, dictator 344 B.C.), 426, 432, 454; Valerius Corvus (or Corvinus), M., 442, 444, 446 (bis), 448, 454, 468, 470, 490 (bis), 502, 504, 512, 514, 516; Valeriani, 226

Veii, 2 et passim; Veientes, 2 et passim; Veiens ager, 150, 200, 242; hostis, 126, populus, 54, praeda, 70, bellum, 28, 56, 58, 108, 172, 176, 240; Veientanus ager, 82, 106; Veientana arx, 74, praeda, 88, 112

Velitrae, 234, 238, 254, 268, 270, 290, 298, 318, 320 (bis), 346; Veliternae, 268, 406; Veliternus hostis, 272; Veliternum bellum; 332; Veliterni coloni, 318

Veneti, 116

Verginius, L., 26, 30 (bis), 32, 38 (quater), 42 (bis), 48, 196; A., 102

Verona, 120

Verrugo, 98, 100 (bis)

Vesta, 106, 112, 174, 178, 184, 422; Vestales virgines, 136, 178 (bis), 422, 424

Veturius, M., 46; C., 304, 320; L., 326, 346

Vitellia, 102

Volscus, 508; Volsci, 28, 34, 42, 44, 56, 82 (ter), 180, 184, 200 (bis), 202, 210 (bis), 218 (bis), 222 (quater), 224, 228, 230, 232, 234 (ter), 238, 246, 250, 254, 268, 272, 278, 282 (bis), 298, 300 (bis), 302 (bis), 304,

INDEX OF NAMES

308, 352, (Vulsci), 420, 422, 446,
448, 450 (ter), 458, 470, 504, 506,
516 (Vulsci); Volscus ager, 202,
302; Volscum bellum, 232, 272, 452

Volsinii, 366; Volsinienses, 108 (bis), 110 (bis), 112 (bis); Volsiniensis ager, 110
Voltumna, 60, 198
Vulsci, see Volsci

MADE AND PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN.
RICHARD CLAY & SONS, LIMITED,
PRINTERS, BUNGAY, SUFFOLK.

THE GALLIC INVASION

English Miles

5 0 10 20 30

THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY.

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED

Latin Authors.

- AENEAS TACTICUS, ASCLEPIODOTUS AND ONASANDER.
Trans. by The Illinois Club.
- APULEIUS. The Golden Ass (Metamorphoses). Trans. by W. Adlington (1566). Revised by S. Gaselee. (2nd Impression.)
- AUSONIUS. Trans. by H. G. Evelyn White. 2 Vols.
- BOETHIUS: TRACTS AND DE CONSOLATIONE PHILOSOPHIAE. Trans. by Rev. H. F. Stewart and E. K. Rand.
- CAESAR: CIVIL WARS. Trans. by A. G. Peskett. (2nd Impression.)
- CAESAR: GALLIC WAR. Trans. by H. J. Edwards. (3rd Impression.)
- CATULLUS. Trans. by F. W. Cornish; TIBULLUS. Trans. by J. P. Postgate; and PERVIGILIIUM VENERIS. Trans. by J. W. Mackail.
(5th Impression.)
- CICERO: DE FINIBUS. Trans. by H. Rackham. (2nd Impression.)
- CICERO: DE OFFICIIS. Trans. by Walter Miller. (2nd Impression.)
- CICERO: DE SENECTUTE, DE AMICITIA, DE DIVINATIONE. Trans. by W. A. Falconer.
- CICERO: LETTERS TO ATTICUS. Trans. by E. O. Winstedt.
3 Vols. (Vol. I 3rd Impression. Vol. II 2nd Impression.)
- CICERO: PRO ARCHIA POETA, POST REDITUM IN SENATU, POST REDITUM AD QUIRITES, DE DOMO SUA, DE HARUSPICUM RESPONSIS, PRO PLANCIO. Trans. by N. H. Watts.
- CLAUDIAN. Trans. by M. Platnauer. 2 Vols.
- CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE. Trans. by W. Watts (1631).
2 Vols. (2nd Impression.)
- FRONTO: CORRESPONDENCE. Trans. by C. R. Haines. 2 Vols.
- HORACE: ODES AND EPODES. Trans. by C. E. Bennett. (5th Imp.)
- JUVENAL AND PERSIUS. Trans. by G. G. Ramsay. (2nd Impression.)
- LIVY. Trans. by B. O. Foster. 13 Vols. Vols. I, II and III.
- MARTIAL. Trans. by W. C. Ker. 2 Vols.
- OVID: HEROIDES AND AMORES. Trans. by Grant Showerman.
(2nd Impression.)
- OVID: METAMORPHOSES. Trans. by F. J. Miller. 2 Vols.
(2nd Edition.)
- PETRONIUS. Trans. by M. Heseltine; SENECA: APOCOTYNTOSIS. Trans. by W. H. D. Rouse. (4th Impression.)
- PLAUTUS. Trans. by Paul Nixon. 5 Vols. Vols. I and II. (Vol. I 2nd Impression.)
- PLINY: LETTERS. Melmoth's Translation revised by W. M. L. Hutchinson. 2 Vols. (2nd Impression.)
- PROPERTIUS. Trans. by H. E. Butler. (3rd Impression.)
- QUINTILIAN. Trans. by H. E. Butler. 4 Vols.
- SALLUST. Trans. by J. C. Rolfe.
- SCRIPTORES HISTORIAE AUGUSTAE. Trans. by D. Magic.
4 Vols. Vol. I.
- SENECA: EPISTULAE MORALES. Trans. by R. M. Gummere.
3 Vols. Vols. I and II.
- SENECA: TRAGEDIES. Trans. by F. J. Miller. 2 Vols.
- SUETONIUS. Trans. by J. C. Rolfe. 2 Vols. (2nd Impression.)
- TACITUS: DIALOGUS. Trans. by Sir Wm. Peterson; and AGRICOLA AND GERMANIA. Trans. by Maurice Hutton. (2nd Impression.)
- TERENCE. Trans. by John Sargeaunt. 2 Vols. (3rd Impression.)
- VIRGIL. Trans. by H. R. Fairclough. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 3rd Impression. Vol. II 2nd Impression.)

Greek Authors.

- ACHILLES TATIUS. Trans. by S. Gaselee.
 AESCHINES. Trans. by C. D. Adams.
 AESCHYLUS. Trans. by H. Weir Smyth. 2 Vols. Vol. I.
 APOLLODORUS. Trans. by Sir James G. Frazer. 2 Vols.
 APOLLONIUS RHODIUS. Trans. by R. C. Seaton. (2nd Impression.)
 THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Trans. by Kirsopp Lake. 2 Vols.
 (3rd Impression.)
 APPIAN'S ROMAN HISTORY. Trans. by Horace White. 4 Vols.
 CALLIMACHUS AND LYCOPHRON, trans. by A. W. Mair, and ARATUS, trans. by G. R. Mair.
 CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA. Trans. by Rev. G. W. Butterworth.
 DAPHNIS AND CHLOE. Thornley's Translation revised by J. M.
 Edmonds; and PARTHENIUS. Trans. by S. Gaselee.
 DIO CASSIUS: ROMAN HISTORY. Trans. by E. Cary. 9 Vols.
 Vols. I to VI.
 EURIPIDES. Trans. by A. S. Way. 4 Vols. (Vols. I, II and IV 3rd Impression. Vol. III 2nd Impression.) GALEN: ON THE NATURAL FACULTIES. Trans. by A. J. Brock.
 THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY. Trans. by W. R. Paton. 5 Vols.
 (Vols. I and II 2nd Impression.)
 THE GREEK BUCOLIC POETS (THEOCRITUS, BION, MOS-CHUS). Trans. by J. M. Edmonds. (4th Impression.)
 HERODOTUS. Trans. by A. D. Godley. 4 Vols. Vols. I to III.
 HESIOD AND THE HOMERIC HYMNS. Trans. by H. G. Evelyn White. (2nd Impression.)
 HIPPOCRATES. Trans. by W. H. S. Jones. 4 Vols. Vols. I and II.
 HOMER: ODYSSEY. Trans. by A. T. Murray. 2 Vols. (Vol. I. 2nd Imp.)
 JULIAN. Trans. by Wilmer Cave Wright. 3 Vols.
 LUCIAN. Trans. by A. M. Harmon. 8 Vols. Vols. I to III. (Vols.
 I and II 2nd Impression.)
 LYRA GRAECA. Trans. by J. M. Edmonds. 3 Vols. Vol. I.
 MARCUS AURELIUS. Trans. by C. R. Haines. (2nd Impression.)
 MENANDER. Trans. by F. G. Allinson.
 PAUSANIAS: DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Trans. by W. H. S.
 Jones. 5 Vols. and Companion Vol. Vol. I.
 PHILOSTRATUS: THE LIFE OF APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.
 Trans. by F. C. Conybeare. 2 Vols. (2nd Impression.)
 PHILOSTRATUS AND EUNAPIUS, LIVES OF THE SOPHISTS.
 Trans. by Wilmer Cave Wright.
 PINDAR. Trans. by Sir J. E. Sandys. (3rd Impression.)
 PLATO: EUTHYPHRO, APOLOGY, CRITO, PHAEDO, PHAED-
 RUS. Trans. by H. N. Fowler (3rd Impression.)
 PLATO: THEAETETUS AND SOPHIST. Trans. by H. N. Fowler.
 PLUTARCH: THE PARALLEL LIVES. Trans. by B. Perrin.
 11 Vols. Vols. I to X.
 POLYBIUS. Trans. by W. R. Paton. 6 Vols. Vols. I to III.
 PROCOPIUS: HISTORY OF THE WARS. Trans. by H. B. Dewing.
 7 Vols. Vols. I to III.
 QUINTUS SMYRNAEUS. Trans. by A. S. Way.
 SOPHOCLES. Trans. by F. Storr. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 5th Impression.
 Vol. II 2nd Impression.)
 ST. JOHN DAMASCENE: BARLAAM AND IOASAPH. Trans. by the Rev. G. R. Woodward and Harold Mattingly.
 STRABO: GEOGRAPHY. Trans. by Horace L. Jones. 8 Vols.
 Vols. I and II.
 THEOPHRASTUS: ENQUIRY INTO PLANTS. Trans. by Sir Arthur Hort, Bart. 2 Vols.
 THUCYDIDES. Trans. by C. F. Smith. 4 Vols.
 XENOPHON: CYROPAEDIA. Trans. by Walter Miller. 2 Vols.
 XENOPHON: HELLENICA, ANABASIS, APOLOGY, AND SYM-POSIUM. Trans. by C. L. Brownson and O. J. Todd. 3 Vols.
 XENOPHON: MEMORABILIA AND OECONOMICUS. Trans. by E. C. Marchant.

University of St. Francis

GEN 878.4 L784

Livius

Livy

v.3

3 0301 00034835 5